The main stumbling block to agreement is still the one word beneficial" in the board's version of the back-to-work formula, which would open the door for pit closures on economic grounds. However, the union does privately admit that the board did make a substantial concession last week on the future of five "test case" pits: Polmaise in Scotland, Herrington in Durham, Bull Cliffe Wood and Cortonwood in Yorkshire and Snowdown in Kent Those collieries would remain open subject to the provisions of the new criteria for pit closures. That movement is not regarded as sufficient by the three national officials of the union, the president, Mr Arthur Scargill, the general secretary, Mr Peter Heathfield, and the vice-president, Mr Michael McGahey. They will recommend continuation of the stoppage in the hope that the board can be compelled to withdraw completely its pro-posals of March 6 to shut down four million tonnes of capacity in the current financial year.

The miners insist that because of the strike, the industry will be lucky to fulfil half its target of 100 million tonnes in 1984-85, and therefore to talk for producing coal that was unsaleable. about pit closures in that period is nonsensical. Coal board chiefs have

Russians let Bonn open lorry

From Our Correspondent Вопл

Moscow and Bonn yesterday ended their dispute over a wayward Russian lorry when West German customs men were allowed to inspect its sealed container in the grounds of the Soviet embassy in Bad Godesberg, a Bonn suburb.

The customs officers spent 20 minutes casting an eye over the container's load and photographing it from the outside, but they did not open anything and refused to tell journalists what they had found. Herr Peter Boenisch, the chief government spokesman, said later that the nine-ton load consisted of 207 cases which the Russians said contained radio and coding equipment for their new diplomatic mission in Geneva.

More talks due on Civil Service pay

By Our Labour Correspondent Civil Service union leaders are to have new pay talks with the Treasury this week as the Government tries to clear the backlog of negotiations in the public services left over at the end of the pay round.

The unions will hear the Government's response to their demand, made, 20 at meeting-with Mr. Nigel Lawson, Chan-cellor of the Exchequer, 10 days ago, that the 4.5 per cent pay offer for 500,000 white collar civil servants should be in-creased to at least 7 per cent.

The social security strike

Talks about talks bring hope

A meeting at the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service tomorrow offers the the first hope of ending the 10-week strike at a social security computer centre which threatens payment of increase in November for eight million pensioners and seven million recipients of child benefit. The small, wooden hut outside the main social security computer centre at Longbenton, in the north-eastern suburbs of Newcastle upon Tyne, is clearly at odds with the high technology complex beyond the

It is the first big domestic dispute at Longbenton, and its linked computer centre at Washington, Co. Durham, since it went into operation shortly after the Second World War. But any initial trepidation has been replaced by a determi-nation more usually associated with more militant groups and bolstered by strike pay equal to half of their net earnings.

The dispute has stopped the issue of new pension books and the unions say that it is already too late to program the com-puters to pay the 5.1 per cent and 35p increase in child benefit due from November 23. Management still hopes to pay the new rate. But with talks about talks due

Price war unlikely as Sealink goes private

Better food and shops are likely to be the first changes the public sees on board the newly privatized Scalink. But Sea Containers Ltd. which takes over the ferry company from British Rail this week, is unlikely to start a price war to win passengers from its competitors. Nor are changes expected overnight - certainly not before the busy summer Sea Containers is registered in Bermuda and mainly American owned, but has its headquarters and more than half its business in Britain, Its founder president, Mt James Sherwood, made his name pioneering the lessing of maritime container equipment in the 1960s, but is now determined to move into leisure. He has spent £8m reviving the Orient Express and owns the Cipriani Hotel in Venice.

But the best clue to Sealink's future may be the experience of the five former British Transport Hotels bought by the company from BR last year.

Only now, after a year of careful studies, are major plans for changes emerging. The hotels, in York, Scotland, Cornwell and Stratford-upon-Ayon are now being slowly upgraded and refurbished. Mr Sherwood's aim, a company spokesman said, is to emphasize the individual character of each property.

Although Mr Sherwood is said to have visited most of Sealink's major operations, a similar pace of change is expected at the ferry company. Eventually, however, Sea Containers' attempt to make Britain's largest ferry operator more profitable is expected to lead to some important changes for its 37 ships and 10 harbours.

Passenger services to the Channel Islands seem certain to be limited to the daytime, and to operate from Weymouth only. In contrast, passenger services to the Isle of Wight from both Portsmouth and Lymington are expected to be modernized, with some new and faster ships. It was a bizarre sight as the heavily tattooed Christie, aged 37, followed by a caravan of Olympic officials and TV cameras and reporters made his brief run before turning the torch over to the next runner.

Scores of motorcycle gang members who had flocked in from around the country roared alongside him on their bicycles. "It's a historic moment," he said. "It proves we are as patriotic as anyone else. We are not a bunch of terrorists. This is what the Olympics are about." Then he spent the next hour happily signing autographs.

On Saturday and Sunday thousands of spectators lining main roads greeted the arrival of the Olympic torch in Los Angeles. The American football star O. J. Simpson, carried it up California's Highway One, alongside the Pacific into Santa Monica and passed it to Michael Bailey a seven-year-old cerebral palsy victim in front of an all star crowd that included the Mayor of Los Angeles, Mr Tom Bradley and the Olympic youth band.

With the British budget argument apparently settled in the imperial decor of Fontainebleau, after a dramatic interlude which severely strained Britain's relations with the rest of the Comback to Brussels and Britain is once again centre-stage.

For all that Britain is now mouthing words once used by the other member states about "sticking within Community law", its character has not changed. It is still a miser, unprepared to spend any more money on the Community than it has to. the Community has overspent and there is no money to pay passed round. Britain will not put anything into the hat and shows every sign of sitting on it to stop anybody else putting anything into it, either. The Community will survive and Britain will remain a member. The money will be found next year or the year after and Britain, along with every other country, will agree to allow the budget to have more money from 1986 at the

The question is whether the extra ill will Britain is now building up is in the long term interests of the Community, as claim. Only by tight budgetary control, the British argument runs, can the Community be efficient and effective. The Community has got to learn to live within its means and there is no time like the present to make a start.

Against that is the fact that Britain should now be hoping wanted when it joined. That means achieving objectives like tearing down internal frontiers, clearing the way to cheaper air fares and opening up the insurance market throughout the Community to British companies. These objectives are un-doubtedly fair and should benefit Britain's economy enourmously, but they will be obtained only with difficulty and it is hard to see other countries giving way to British arguments when they still see Britain as being mean-minded and obsessed by the need to pinch every EEC penny.

One person who may suffer from anti-British feeling is Lady Elies, the conservative MEP for the Thames Valley, who has put in a bid for the presidency of the European Parliament at its opening ession this week.

Her chances of taking over the chair at Strasbourg were enhanced when M Jacques Delors was chosen as the next President of the Commission. The other declared candidate from the centre right is M Pierre Pflimlin, the former French Prime Minister and long-serving mayor of Strasbourg.

- Many MEPs are known to think it would be wrong to have presidents of the two institutions from the same -country, so Lady Elles stood a chance of being the front runner of the right, which has a majority of votes in the Parliament.

The candidate of the left is Mr Piet Dankert, the Dutch Socialist who has been President of the Parliament for the past two and a half years. He is also in danger from a prejudice among members against letting anyone, how-ever efficient, hold the post for more than one term.

All that should have helped Lady Elles, but she, in turn, has to overcome the fact that she is a member from a country which is still in dispute with the rest of the Community over the budget, however justified its case. Runcie in secret talks with kings in Nigeria

From Eddie Irob

Dr Robert Runcie the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is attending the sixth Anglican Consultative Council here, has discussed the Anglo-Nigerian diplomatic conflict with three leading Nigerian traditional rulers known to have influence with the ruling Supreme Military Council.

The independent Guardian newspaper in Lagos, quoting usually reliable sources, said yesterday that last Wednesday Dr Runcie secretly met three traditional obas (kings) in Lagos. They were Sijuwade, the Ooni of Ife, Oba Oyebade Lipede, the Alake of Absolute. Lipede, the Alake of Abeokuta, and Oba Sikiry Adetona, the Awujale of Ijebuland. They discussed the diplomatic problems caused by the attempted abduction from Britain of the former Nigerian politician, Alhaji Umaru Dikko, 17 days

Dr Runcie, who, sources say is a close friend of the Ooni of Ife and the Alake of Abeokuta, was accompanied Dr Timothy Olufosoy, the Anglican Arch-bishop of Nigeria. According to the Guardian, no details of the discussions were disclosed, but one source described the meet-ing "very frank and cordial."

The three kings later the same day met the Nigerian Chief of State, General Muhammadu Buhari, ostensibly to restate their support for the military government".

Maggie Smith (left), who opens in The Way of the World at Chichester next week, is an inexplicably rare sight on the British stage, and a tantalizing rarity in interview too . . .

The relief of having something to worry about assembled to greet the stars of the present Chichester season and question them on their current roles: after hearing Sir Alec Guinness talking about his superlative new Shylock, and Joan Plowright on the delights of rehearsing with William Gaskill for the forthcoming Way of the World, reporters turned to Maggie Smith expecting to hear some details of her Millamant in this same production (one which opens there on August 1). Well, said Miss Smith by way of explaining her return to Chichester after 15 years, her return to the British stage after a mere three, and her return to Millamant a decade after she first played her in Ontario, "you see, I live very close to the theatre here. It really is extremely convenient".

Second only to Katharine Hepburn, who once explained to me that her principal reason for not leaving MGM during the worst of her contract years was that studio assistance was invaluable when one had to change trains in Chicago, Maggie Smith has always had the most down-to-earth theatrical attitudes of any actress I know.

Acting in her view is something to be done, not discussed: but as she has a resolutely settled and unsensational private life (married since the Robert Stephens divorce to her. original Oxford love, the writer Cross) it is often oddly to find much that can be sense of a National government in exile down in West Sussex? Gaskill. Plowright and Smith were after all three of the pillars of the Olivier regime at the Old Vic, and this new Way of the World might therefore be viewed with a certain 1960s

"It's true that Joan and I shared a dressing-room at the Vic and were in several of the same productions, though never at the same time: we kept following each other into Master Builder and Three Sisters, and then of course Gaskill and I did The Recruiting Officer and Beaux Stratagem for Olivier's National But that was a very long time ago, and Gaskill quite rightly maists that every production is a new beginning.

"The curious thing about Milla-mant is that I can't recall anything at all about the last time I played her; it was with Jeremy Brett as Mirabell and Robin Phillips directing, but it was my first Canadian season and I was so befogged and terrified by having to do a Cleopatra a few weeks later that I managed to wipe the whole thing from my mind. Just as well, really: this can be a fresh start. They're already talking about it moving on to the Haymarket, but that seems to me a bit previous: let's just get through Chichester for now.

don't really know why I've been away from the theatre, any theatre, for so long: the last thing I did was Virginia and I found that grindingly difficult and very depress-ing, so that put me off for a while. Also the Canadian seasons came to an end when Robin Phillips left there, and I've never really known what to do when I wasn't in a company. I started off with Kenneth Williams and all those revue people, then I knew I had to get out of that so I went to the National, and then

"Since then it's been a drifting time, and none of the offers I've had have made me want to rejoin a company. Mind you, there haven't been that many offers: the curious thing is that when you're inside a company the parts seem to come along just because you're there. When you're on the outside, then suddenly the theatre and television seem to be made up of lots of little clubs with the members all working away inside them and the nonmembers just hanging around watching from the outside.

"That's why I like films: they take you away and give you a whole new set of worries. I went to Hungary to do a sort of Guardsman with Christopher Plummer and then I did one he wrote himself (The Missionary) and the other is a new Alan Bennett script called A Private Function where Michael is a chiropodist and I'm his wife and it's 1947 and there's rationing still."

Miss Smith has just had her age whitewashed out of several hundred Chichester programmes, on the understandable grounds that it is nobody's business but her own, and there is already quite enough to worry about; it is anyway not too hard to fathom as she hists an OUDS Viola at Oxford in 1952. But there does now appear to be a very real danger that her stage career has gone into soft focus over here, and that seems to me a very strong indictment of both the National and the RSC management. They say you never forget how to act that it's like riding a bicycle but I'm sure this time that if I'd left it any longer I'd have been off the bicycle altogether and on to a tricycle. They also bang on at you about recharging your batteries: what happens when they go totally flat? The trouble with an actress's life is that there's no glissando: just one horrendous leap from Juliet to Lady Bracknell. 'I really don't see myself as Dame Maggie, bravely battling on into my theatrical eighties; on the other hand acting is what I do for a living, and I would like somebody to tell me what I should be playing next. Olivier and Robin always did that for me: now I come back to a theatre which seems to have changed in some odd way during the years I was in Canada. Nobody seems to be in charge: just a lot of little groups all carrying on as best they can. Apart from the Virginia Woolf, I haven't done a new script in 10 years; even the Stoppard Night and Day was only on Broadway. where it flopped largely because the audience didn't seem to have the faintest idea what we were talking about, especially when we got to the bit about Cash's name tapes.

~I.ve hardly ever worn modern clothes on a stage in this country:
oven Private Lives was a period piece, and the trouble is that I'm really no good at managing my own career. I can never think of a pan I would be remotely able to play unless somebody else tells me just to go ahead and do it and stop worrying. In fact of course one never stops worrying but at least when you're in rehearsal you feel you belong, and down here in Sussex there isn't the stress of a West End opening. Without the theatre there seems to be no shape to my life at

"I do now feel terribly remote: I've become a sort of Sussex recluse and it is marvellous to be back among actors working on a classic script. At least now when I walk the dog I've got something really tangible to worry about, like forgetting the lines. If you are, like me a natural womier then it is such ar relief to know what it is you're weakness for the kind of play that consists of a hutful of soldiers shouting at each other. In Tom Kempinski's play, first seen in London in 1979, they have good reason to shout, being faced with shooting a deserter the next day, and amid all the hysteria Mr Kempinski gets some good tough ironies out of it, as well as asking some uncomfortable questions. But Roland Jaquarello's production has a growing sense of unreality; they might be Martians or Jacobeans, and you cease to care who shoots whom so long as they just get on with

That said, the situation stands at the intersection point of so many crucial questions: whether soldiers have a right to conscience what happens when they question their function (this is Northern Ireland, Hilary Finch | but there are echoes of Lt Tinker in the Falklands), or even whether there is any difference between killing an enemy, a traitor or any other fellow-man. Held at gunpoint and ordered to kill a comrade. you make no such distinction.

After the first half-hour, seemingly interminable for Peter-Hugo Daly's flow coarse backchat, nerves start to snap. Though Martin Phillips's sensitive youngster seems like-liest to crack. it is actually the brooding doubter Santo (Vincenzo Ricotta) who seizes a rifle and holds them all hostage: by a similarly theatrical reversal. Mr Daly's character starts uttering some telling arguments about the deterrence behind shooting deserters.

Since too many parts are under-characterized, more's the pity that Crockworth the looming Glaswegian (Louis Mellis) is disabled by a shot so early. The cast gets an A for effort and for that concentration which is becoming an impressive Young Vic trademark; but the play leaves a nagging sense of having missed a clean bull's-eye.

Manon/Beauty Covent Garden

The real test of a production like Harlem Dance Theatre's new Giselle comes when you start changing the cast. The ballet successfully survived that crucial moment on Saturday afternoon. At the première last Wednesday, it had been illumi-nated by the dancing of Virginia Johnson and Eddie Shellman in the leading roles. She is unusually tall to play the delicate Giselle, he is built rather on the robust side for a romantic dancer, but both have a sense of style and drama that made them outstanding in the parts even at their first attempt.

Stephanie Dabney and Donald Williams, their replacements in the second cast, are in appearence more the type on expects, but less special in their dancing, although both very able. In a way, the future of Giselle in the Harlem repertory is predicated more by their sound, straightforward performances than by the other, more exeptional performers. This Creole setting for Giselle has brought the ballet as securely within the grasp of these mainly black dancers as for the Europeans among whom it was created; and, incidentally, provides some interesting new insights into its social relation-ships for jaded white observers.

Derek Williams and Theara Ward as the very rich free black and his daughter to whom Albert is engaged can mix more easily and plausibly among the residents and neighbours of the farm where Giselle lives than can the stiff princes among the peasants of other productions. Their grooms look cheerfully self-conscious and smug among the farmhands. Albert's Euro-peanized friend Wilfred forms a natural link between the two

The Louisiana setting, which provides so attractive and natural a location for the domestic tragedy of the first act, also makes a sinister background for the ghostly rites of the second half, where lank branches hang low over the wampy bayou. Albert's arrival, in a flat boat punted by Wilfred, is both more striking and more likely than strolling alone through the woods.

The ghosts in this staging in their chinging, fragile pale lilac dresses, are more voluptuous than usual, especially Lorraine Graves as their amazonian queen, which helps clarify the motive for their war on any men who trespass there. The very quiet ending, with Giselle's spirit blessing Albert before she vanishes, is touching.

Keith Saunders in the matinee cast, gave a less intense account of Hilarion than Lowell Smith, but on similar lines. Yvonne Hall and Augustus Van Heerden are lively in the first act duet, but Judy Tyrus and Joseph Cipolla on the first night were more notable. Cipolla is an Italian American, a dancer of notable gifts, and I like the way that Harlem Dance Theatre has managed to accept this white soloist as completely as New York City Ballet formerly accepted Harlem's founder and director, Arthur Mitchell.

At Covent Garden, we are experiencing the bitter-swee pang of seeing David Wall dance several of his great roles for the last time before leaving the stage to become associate director of the Royal Academy of Dancing. After The Sleeping Beauty on Saturday night, his last announced performance in a full-length classic, supporters hung a banner from the stalls circle proclaiming the end of an cra. theatrical performance. On this occasion he looked exhausted by his last solo, as well he might after standing in for injured dancers three times during the preceding week, dancing both leading male roles in Manon and appearing with an unfamiliar partner, Bryony Brind, in Beauty - extra rehearsals each time for just one performance. His Lescaut in Friday's Manon showed his gifts for comedy and sinister melodrama at their height, with a very animated and amusing account of his mistress from Karen Paisey. The Aurora for what will (barring accidents and further

every role into a complete substitutions) be his last Beauty was Jennifer Penney, a dancer whose appearances are few nowadays but, on this evidence, worth waiting for. Her balances in the Rose Adagio were spectacularly held, and she ornamented her last solo with pretty detail.

The special quality of Wall is that he has combined an exceptional flair for acting with his very fine skills as a partner and a solo performer, all equally marched. One does not see such intensity among his potential successors - but perhaps I am unfair to young Bruce Sansom, whose Florestan was particularly stylish. The competition is that was vital to the success of the whole campaign.

Thomas landed at Ajax Bay on 25th May with a detachment of twenty men.

They carried with them their satellite communications equipment in just eight boxes. And within the hour they were set up, camouflaged and fully operational.

"I rang straight through to the Command Centre in Northwood! ' I think they were quite pleased to hear from me," Thomas recalls.

"The signal was making a round trip, via the satellite, of about 100,000 miles. But it sounded like I was phoning the next village."

With this channel to London open, communications began to flood in. Some days they received as many as five hundred, with at

"There's an enormous amount of technical stuff to learn at the outset. But even more daunting is the fact that you have charge of around fifty to sixty experienced men.

The 'Satcom' at Ajax Bay became, in consequence, something of a nerve centre, frequently visited by the Commanding Officers of the Task Force.

"In most other regiments, a Captain will have little day-to-day contact with a Brigadier or a General," says Thomas.

"But in the Royal Signals you have to work closely with them on a regular basis.

That can mean unrelenting pressure on you and your men.

The equipment has to perform every time, or else." Thomas and his men remained on air for 97% of the Falklands War. (In fact they were still fully operational some months after the war had finished.) The only interruptions to service were caused, not by technical problems, but by Argentinian bombers and the Task Force's own Chinook helicopters. The helicopters, in particular, caused such an immense down draught that they invariably blew the receiver dish off course, causing the signal to be lost.

"On one occasion, General Moore was making a vital call to London about the progress of the battle for Port Stanley.

Outside, my men and I were clinging onto the dish for dear life with helicopters thundering above our heads.

Not exactly text book stuff, I know. But you have to improvise when there's a war on."

Learning to communicate.

Jack Thomas attended Sandhurst in 1974 after finishing his A levels. Since his interests lay more on the technical side, he chose to join the Royal Corps of Signals.

He also opted to take a degree in Applied Science. He considered that the qualification would stand him in good stead both in the Royal Signals and in civilian life, should he leave the Army.

However, before he could read for his degree he had 3 years of soldiering to do.

His first task involved getting to grips with the main communications systems used by the Army.

Basically, any fighting unit in the field will be fully equipped with Clansman radio and will be in contact

Such equipment was new to the Army at that time. So Thomas was sent to carry out organisational trials in Denmark.

"The main component of the system is a dish, about five feet across, which transmits an extremely narrow radio beam.

With the aid of precise calculations the beam is aimed at a satellite in geo-stationary orbit, 23,000 miles from the earth.

The satellite receives the beam, amplifies it and then bounces it back to earth. Add to that a radio set, a teleprinter and a scrambling device and you have a fully operational 'Satcom'

Subsequently, Thomas and his men found themselves deploying the 'Satcom' in a variety of situations.

Out in the desert he had to arrange a double satellite link-up so a local dignitary could speak to a friend laid up in a London hospital.

In retrospect, Jack Thomas would not swop his career in the Royal Signals for any other.

He feels he has gained far more experience than he would have done in, say, a civilian telecommunications company. "I think the Army pushes you that much further," he says. "You not only have to master the technology, but you have to make it work in situations of extreme stress.

You are given a great deal of responsibility early on in your career. And, most important of all, the chance to develop qualities of leadership."

All around the sides of the dry valley head are the rims of every ensuing low water mark. From a distance they could be the furrow traces of a steep field.

But the most peculiar thing about the whole hollow, eerie scene is the colour and texture of the dead fields; red-brown and dusty, and now trodden hard by more feet than would ever have been seen in the old parish except on the days of the great shepherds' meets or at the very last service at the church in August 1935. I was sitting with a teacher from Canada, a young Welsh nurse and a man who did not speak but just fixed things with an intense, glazed stare. We re at the Tudor Rooms Mediaeval Tavern and Play-house, in St Martin's Lane, central London; its brochure says: "Come and relive the 1520s. A night to remember."

When I arrived, alone, I was accosted at once by the imposing figure of King Henry VIII. clothed most convincingly in orange and gold, though without the syphilitic leg bandage made so famous on

"Let me escort you, my dear, to the bar for a glass of mead. It's a drink of fertility", he said, an enormous gleam in his eye. myself like this, it would be a night to rembember indeed: wed, bedded and beheaded, before you could say, "Rough King Foul". He left me with a girl in a mob-cap and long skirt handing out the mead.

"What do you do here?" I asked her. "I'm wenching", she said.

The banqueting hall was done in wood panels, embel-lished with the odd Holbein facsimile. Large groups of Americans, mostly students, sat at long tables facing a stage. First a jester came on, acting very much like a nightclub MC, only in tights.

"Welcome to the court of our great King Henry", he said. "Tonight, the gentlemen are the lords and masters. The ladies are - second-class! A loud cheer erupted from the audience. It vas a night of ye quaint olde English values, such as mis-

The menu was five courses, including a choice of chicken, beef or beef. I had beef and asked a friendly wench if I could order a glass of wine. "We don't do anything by the glass", she answered, "only by the jug". plastic bib round my neck.
Apart from having "Tudor Rooms" on the front, it was like the ones you get at the dentist's. I felt as though she were going to take my teeth out, to make me fpeak like those olde manufcriptf.

Outside, I asked the wench with the honey-flavoured sherry where the ladies' room was. She marked "Chantels".

When I came back, King Henry was taking a picture of a man in the stocks, his punishment for losing the race to drink a yard of ale. He did not get tomatoes or old serfs thrown at him, just girls from the audience kissing him on the cheek.

Then Anne Boleyn came back on with the jester, to sing a song that went like this:

"Mead, mead! That's what we need! Oh yes, indeed! The Queen applied herself to this, as to all other aspects of her role, in a carefree, wholesome way. Even when they pretended to chop her head off she did not let up her smile. And the energy of the girl!

Not only did she sing "Greens-, leeves" and dance the pavane; she also got into fishnet tights and a stripy T-shirt to dance to a sea shanty, and then a frock like lots of pennants strung together for a tambourine gypsy up for a verse of "Oh, you Beautiful Doll" - only to whip half of it off again in a striptease. By the time I heard Michael Jackson records coming from the "Annie's Room" disco. I did not know what century I was in.

I found out afterwards why this queen had had quite such an active reign: Jane Seymon was off for the night. So, too, was the belly-dancer, although the management apparently did not know this at the time. What became of the "Can-Can" girls, also featured in the brochuse I never discovered.

On my way out in the foyer, I found the jester, waiting around for his doubloons. Dressed now in trousers and a shirt, he looked somewhat more contemplative.

"How did you get into this line?" I asked him. "What did you do before?"

"I was a teacher", he said-"I gave it up to do Theatre in Education." A quick look at his face told me he did not think

Do you remember the end of the Affair El Vino's? It happened in November 1982 when, after three previous court tearings Anna Coote and Tess Gill won a High Court ruling against the Fleet Street wine bar so perfectly described by clever Mr Kington in this newspaper as "not so much a place as a

Having been told that the 37-year-old ban of female barflies was unlawful, El Vino's manager, Peter Bracken, Misses Coote and Gill and offer to forgive and forget. He tried (unsuccessfully) to get them banned from the joint as probable troublemakers.

And there the matter rested until last week when Triff Ramsey, the sales executive of a forthcoming magazine working women, walked into the fairly new branch of El Vino's in Blackfriars.

She was looking sweetly pretty in a white jumpsuit trimmed with pink and worn with a matching pink accessories, this tout ensemble being just the ticket in which to persuade advertising managers to book a double-page spread in the January issue.

As is sometimes her wont on entering licensed premises, Triff went up to the bar and ordered a kir. She was then told that she could not have a drink "because you're not wearing a skirt or a

Demarco mark-down

An Edinburgh Festival without Richard Demarco? Unthinkable: the man has presented almost 300 festival events since 1966. Not impossible: the future of the Demarco gallery is in doubt, since the Scottish Arts Council's decision to dock his grant by £8,000 next year and similar amounts in the following years. This year's cut alone removes 25 per cent of his grant, as the SAC begins to transfer funding to two galleries which it controls. The Fruit Market in Edinburgh and

The Third Eye in Glasgow. It is not the first time the SAC has given Demarco the cold shoulder. In 1980 it took away his grant altogether he responded by raising £65,000 from friends in two years. But the man who has presented some 900 exhibitions and introduced Tadeuzs Kantor and Joseph Beurys to Britain had to pay himself nothing in that time to survive as Scotland's impresario of the avant garde. This year, undeterred, he is putting on Demarcation, a peripatetic conference on "Art and the Human Environment", then a dozen exhibitions, including Auzart in Edinburgh (the first joint exhibition of Australian and New Zealand art seen in Europe), New French Photography and new paintings from Paris, New York and Venice, not to mention 24 theatre productions. "All we need is 20,000 visitors to make it work", he says.

Far flung

The idea that Scotland is a branchline economy is familiar to businessmen and politicians. It's spreading to football, as the great Aberdeen team that has won the European Cup Winners' Cup, last season's Scottish League, and the Scottish Cup three years in succession, breaks up. Mark McGhee is off to Germany, Gordon Strachan seems suspended between Manchester and Germany, and now international defender Doug Rougvie is signing for Chelsea. To prefer Chelsea to Aberdeen shows a lack of judgment and taste that must puzzle many Londoners as much as it does us north of the border.

Capital venture

The new magazine Scottish Business Insider, riding high after four issues, is going into the talk business. In the autumn it will sponsor Scotland's first venture capital conference, at Gleneagles hotel. The conference seems to owe something to beauty contests: would-be entrepeneurs will make their case before an audience drawn from the managers of venture capital funds. A pity that the judges will not be provided with electronic devices to register immediate investment decisions: it would have been nice to see such flashed up on the screen. The magazine's proprietors, Ray Perman and Alistair Balfour. are well qualified to advise on the use of venture capital: they started the magazine with redundancy money from the defunct Sunday

Into battle

Sir Donald Cameron of Lochiel, whose ancestor was one of the first clan chiefs to join Bonnie Prince Charlie, has opened a new visitors' centre at Culloden Moor, site of the last pitched battle in Britain. The National Trust for Scotland has spent £800.000 on developing the site, including the clearance of a Forestry Commission plantation. About half the cost has been met by the European Regional Development Fund, the Highland Regional Council, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Countryside Commission for Scotland. Up to 200,000 visitors are expected annually. Numbers in the battle were: Jacobites 5,000, Hanoverians 9,000.

Ouitky

Connoisseurs of the unusual during the Edinburgh Festival might find their way to St Cecilia's Hall on a Sunday morning when Andrew Cruickshank will describe "My encounter with Soren Kierkegaard". The nature of the encounter is unknown. The suggestion that Kierkegaard presented himself at evening surgery in Arden House, Cannock Brae, is frivolous, though it would make a good episode for a positively final revival of Dr Finlay's Casebook: "There's a Finlay's Casebook: "There's a Danish gentleman to see you. Dr Cameron. I told him to wait till Janet, did he give his name?" "He did not. It's my idea there's something a wee bit queer about

Why reselection is again an issue, by Julian Haviland

The battle Kinnock has to fight the test the love and loyalty of the party which elected him leader a year ago. On Wednesday Labour's national executive committee will consider his proposals to amend the rules, only four years old, governing the reselection of Labour MPs.

True to character, his followers have already formed clusters of those who approve and those who are affronted. The next few weeks will show apprehensive members of the battle-weary Labour Party whether cudgels are to be taken up once again in the debilitating cause of intra-party democracy.

Other keen observers may learn whether Kinnock's authority as the first leader elected by the whole party is as great as it seems; and whether he can be as cool and resolute in using it.

The present rules, require every Labour MP to submit once in each Parliament to the judgement of his constituency management committee, in the name of "accountability". This was the watchword of the Campaign for Labour Party Democracy (CLPD) which campaigned for a decade to secure the change, and also to take the election of the leader out of the sole control of MPs. The ferocity of those campaigns, with Mr Tony Benn in the vanguard, and of the parliamentary party's vain resistance, domi-nated the Callaghan and Foot years.

Neil Kinnock is the beneficiary of the new system for choosing the leader, which will endure. But he is now determined that the reselection rules cannot stay as they are. "Neil is made to reopen the argument", one prominent left-wing reformer said this week, but without conviction. The instinct of those associated with CLPD, and of their allies on the national executive committee, is to hold what they have gained and to fight for it as grimly as before. Their difficulty, as they have just begun to sense, is that they will have to fight Neil Kinnock too, and if they do that they may be lost.

Kinnock, to their chagrin, commands the new power-base which they themselves had built for him, and is now formidably strong. What has nerved him? The conviction that mandatory reselection is fatally demoralizing much of his fighting strength in the Commons. Since he became leader. Labour MPs by the score have expressed anxiety about their seats, and have begged him to help.

The evidence has accumulated that in some seats "reselection" is a cuphemism for persecution. Rules for calling a dud or disreputable member to account may as easily be used to dislodge an industrious member if his face or his politics does not fit, or if a rival fancies his

Some on the right saw reselection from the first as an ideological weapon, designed to secure not the accountability but the obedience of MPs. Many on the centre and left, Kinnock among them, once favoured reselection, but experience of it has shaken them. No one in the party can measure the problem, but some shrewd judges believe that up to a fifth of the parliamentary party, now reduced to 209 members, risk being kicked out or frozen out by their local parties before the next election. Enthusiasts on the left believe that 20 or 25 sitting Labour MPs whom they want removed would probably reselection. The Kinnock revisionists accept that figure, but estimate that up to 25 other members in their fifties still active

No one has an exhaustive list of those at risk. Like the gravely ill, a few will discuss their symptoms - a hostile management committee, or a faction working to oust them - but most will not. Publicity is no help. Frank Field, MP for Birkenhead, has been awesomely open and threat-ened to fight a by-election if deselected. His statements have only infuriated and alienated key sup-

Most who fight back prefer to do it in secret, working as steakhily as their enemies at winning branches and delegates to their support. Senior figures are not so lucky. Gerald Kanfman, Peter Shore, John Silkin and Michael Cocks, all members of the Shadow Cabinet, are too prominent for their conflicts to remain hidden.

Mr Silkin is said to be in serious trouble at Deptford; the other three, in different degrees of difficulty, are all expected to survive. But Mr Shore, in Bethnal Green and Stepney, and Mr Cocks in Bristol South, may need the help of their leader's lifeline.

The Kinnock proposal looks timid. In fact it is shrewdly judged: it is as much as the trade unions will allow, and to have attempted more easily.

would have been futile. Kinnock proposes new rules that will allow but not compel a constituency party to hold a secret ballot of all members on whether the sitting MP should fight the next election. It is agreed that many MPs who have fallen foul of general management committees (GMCs) could win an appeal to the full membership, and that if they could not they would not be worth Saving.

Many disappointed MPs think Kinnock could have used his authority to go further and complete the adoption of one-member-one-vote. A determined GMC, they argue, will never voluntarily share its power with wider membership.

Kinnock's tacticians have higher hopes. They believe that the taste for participatory democracy is growing in the constituencies; that the trend in last year's leadership election proved this; and that party members, given the chance to vote for or against their MP, will insist on taking it.

There is also a nice procedural point. When the GMC votes on reselection, it votes in secret and can more easily ignore its members wishes. But a preliminary decision on whether to let the members ballot would be taken openly, by a recorded vote. Those who opposed the widening of the franchise might be asked to explain why.

One other feature indicates a cumning designer. To coerce the ency parties, whose activists led the fight for the present rules, would invite resistance. But since the Kinnock proposal would enlarge, not restrict, the rights of constitu-ency parties, it may be hard for the left to find respectable grounds for

Complain they will, however. There will be a row on Wednesday and anger at the party conference at Blackpool in October, Neil Kinnock should win, and may save some parliamentary scalps. But the struggle for power between the parliamentary and other sectors began soon after the Labour Party was born, and will not stop very while there seemed to be enough of it about. But when a problem arises and refuses to go away, new jargon usually evolves to wrap its ugly outline in a pleasant haze. Something disagreeable and difficult is presented as being really jolly exciting when you look into it. That is what is happening to work - or to use its new booming title, the "world of work". It is a world which seems to be full of springboards and launching-pads, a sort of California of the mind.

Workspeak is a product of largescale unemployment. As the numbers of unemployed have remorselessly climbed, so there has been an equally remorseless increase in conferences with titles like "Images for tomorrow's work". These are usually addressed by a new breed of professors of work, who tend to have bright-coloured jerseys and eyes which gleam with benevolence.

These professors are often under-These professors are often under-cover SDP agents, and can be identified by their rejection of the old politics and their knack of minting such phrases as "we are seeing the gradual tapering off of the employment society," "We stand on a hinge of time," and "the social project of society is changing" (all these taken from Professors Charles Handy's The future of Work. Handy's The future of Work, Blackwell, £16.50, £4.95 paperback).

Workspeakers also like to think up new categories of economy and society. To the "black economy" (fancy people doing jobs without paying tax), they have now added the "mauve economy" (fancy jobs which you can run from home like telegram service), the "grey econ-omy" (unpaid activities like house-work) and the "SHE economy", which stands for Sane, Humane and Ecological and "would put people before things, recognizing that people's energies and skills are important renewable resources". I don't know about you, but I don't always feel 100 per cent renewable, especially in the mornings.

For all its charm, I cannot help feeling that futurology is at least in part an escape from the present. This suspicion is fortified by the fondness for "scenario" as a term to describe a particular set of prophecies. A scenario is, after all, a script typically run up in haste to meet a theatrical need.

Francis Pym, in his remarks last week to the aforesaid conference on "Images for Tomorrow's Work" (organized by the church, as so many such conferences are, to show its social concern in an upbeat sort of way), said that patterns of work were changing at a tremendous rate. 'Many people only have an inkling of the scale of the changes we will see in the future."

life will be like in 2001. Inklings are thin on the ground. Among legiti-mate inklings are indeed that the working week and the working life are likely to be shorter than they are today, just as they are shorter today than they were in 1901, and that there will be a whole range of new occupations now barely guessed at. It is also easy enough to predict that people will change jobs more often; that employment is more likely to become home-based and smallscale; and that cooperative enterprises, already multiplying at a great rate, will become a routine option rather than the product of a rare philanthropic initiative. But how much practical use here and now is all this imagining and predicting? How much do all these retty musings on the nature and fiture of work help governments, employers and trade unions to decide how to act?

In common parlance, "unemployed" has one single clear meaning: someone who is not at present performing a service in return for money, and says he wishes to do so. The price at which he would be prepared to work and the price which someone else is prepared to offer are therefore surely both highly relevant.

Yet the price of labour is the one topic which the professors in bright jerseys, ready to embrace so much, appear to shy away from. Even practising politicians like Mr Pym seem to shy away from it too, when they go on about the need for "more imagination" and "a new industrial partnership" and, above all, for "the fullest possible national debate".

These are all very desirable things. Yet this kind of discourse does rather give the impression that there is some great clusive mystery about the obstinate prevalence of unemployment in western Europe. But is there? Jobs are not sorcerers' creations; they are contracts between people; and if there are not enough of them, the price is likely to have something to do with the shortage.

If real wages in Britain had not increased over the last 10 years, it is a fair bet that unemployment here would still be at the more tolerable levels of the 1960s. After all, that is st what has happened in the United States. Impossible in a highly unionized country like Britain? Well, look at Sweden, Austria and Japan where trade unions seem to have a clearer view of how to preserve employment and to use their monopoly powers with some Lower wage rises mean lower employment. Militant trade unions destroy jobs. What boring things to say. How unimaginative. But sometimes it is important to go on saying what is boring to remind ourselves that it is also what is important.

The lorry drivers, not caring who won or who got the blame, but simply wanting the thing to end, seized the weapon themselves to precipitate a crisis. A few television shots of stranded families waiting impatiently in their shorts, windsurfers strapped to the top of their estate cars speaking eloquently of anticipated delights so miserably postponed, succeeded where all the CBFs grim warnings had failed.

(Perhaps, though, there is one thing that tugs at the nation's heartstrings more urgently than the sight of people not being able to get away on holiday, and that is the sight of them not being able to get back. It may have been the pictures of holiday Britons languishing in Calais, and the thought of those cars full of damp sandy towels and spilling half-empty cans of warm Coca-Cola that really did the trick). In general our understanding of against the trade unions. But I am sure the truth is more complicated.

In these days when strikes are as much exercises in the competitive manipulation of public opinion as they are trials of strength, unions particularly the public sector unions - face a near impossible public relations task. They have to show muscle and yet appear to be morally in the right; to demonstrate caserness to conclude the strike as well as doggedness in sitting it out; and most difficult of all - they have to hurt the public in order to attract public attention and support.

It is a tightrope: how to be disruptive without totally exasperating the public; how to avoid immediate extreme frustration in favour of action which has a slower but still noticeable effect. One result of this use of the weapons fashioned for the fight against capitalism for a wholly different modern purpose has been that the result tends to be the opposite of that intended.

Thus, a strike aimed at freight but not at passengers could potentially have done more damage to the economy (and thus eventually to dockers' jobs) than one aimed at passengers alone. Similarly, the teachers' recent industrial action, which exempted children taking exams and concentrated instead on withdrawing out-of-school activities for younger pupils (including, this time, the setting and marking of homework and the writing of reports), probably has had more long-term effects than an assault on the examinations would have done. (After all, subsequent alternative arrangements for the disappointed candidates could have been made.)

More than most workers perhaps, teachers would welcome a system of salary negotiation that avoided strikes: there has been considerable (though publicly muted) support for the SDP proposal of a support proposal of a guaranteed comparability review linked to a nostrike agreement. But meanwhile they are caught in the same archaic rimal as everyone else. The worst of it is that for everyone, workers, unions, em-ployers, public servants and governployers, public servants and government alike, it gets in the way of long-term planning — something this country has almost given up. Caught in the toils of perpetual crisis management, we seem to be suffering from suffering from a sort of year-long July madness. Maybe the appeal of those stranded holiday makers has deeper symbolic significance the desperate desire, not to be frustrated, to get away from it all. All the daily reports on the dock strike negotiations made it clear that all parties understood perfectly the power of this ultimate weapon. THE SHADOW OF THE COLONELS

Today is the tenth anniversary of the fall of the dictatorship in Greece. It will be marked there with appropriate messages and speeches, but not exactly celebrated, for it is too intimately connected with another anniversary which fell last Friday, that of the Turkish army's landing in northern Cyprus, which in turn was triggered by an event whose anniversary fell a week ago yesterday: the coup against President Makarios carried out by Greek officers of the Cyprus national guard, acting on orders from Athens.

The Greek "colonels" (by then represented for all practical purposes by General Demetrios loannidis, the head of the military police) brought about their own downfall by attempting to seize control of Cyprus and so provoking, or providing the perfect pretext for the Turkish intervention. That intervention was rightly seen by almost all Greeks as a national

All Greeks regard Cyprus as a Greek island, and they have sound historical and demographic reasons for doing so. But well before 1974 majority opinion both in Greece and in Cyprus had recognized that Turkish sensibility would not permit the incorporation of Cyprus into the Greek state. The independence of Cyprus under majority rule was, to all but the most nationalistic Greek officers and the fanatics of "Eoka B", an acceptable second-best. But once Turkey had openly and directly intervened that second-best was jeopardized and the stage was set for partition, if not for outright Turkish annexation of the

The Greek Cypriots under their Greek officers fought heroically against what they inevitably saw as a Turkish invasion of their homeland. (Alas, some of them also committed atrocities against their Turkish Cypriot fellow-citizens). But Greece, after seven years of military rule. turned out to have no military response to what should have been one of the most obvious military contingencies to plan for, even if it had not been directly provoked by a political action of the military regime General Ioannidis had apparently counted on the United States to restrain Turkey. Once extent of apparent, the humiliated chiefs of staff in Athens took steps to depose him, and invited the country's civilian politicians to take over power.

The return of democracy was rightly hailed, by this newspaper among many others, as "one of the victories of freedom". But we were uncomfortably aware that it was a victory for which the leadership of the "free world" could claim little credit. "The tries. A characteristic of this strategic importance of Greece is The Times commented great. on July 25 1974, "but realism in politics is not necessarily served by supporting regimes which serious and immediate threat swing the country to the opposite extreme.

"Fortunately", the same leading article added, "This last danger has not emerged so far". Both Greece and the West were indeed fortunate that the reins of power in that crisis were assumed by Mr Constantine Karamanlis, who showed great wisdom and statesmanship in ensuring the establishment of a democracy healthier and broadcr-based than that which had preceded the military coup of 1967. As prime minister until 1980 Mr Karamanlis kept Greece firmly within the Atlantic Alliance, in spite of the strong anti-American feelings of many Greeks. He also secured her entry into the European Com-munity - and indeed it was the much firmer attitude of Western Europe (as opposed to the United States) towards the dictatorship which made it possible for him to convince the majority of his compatriots that "free world" was not a complete misnomer.

As president since 1980 Mr Karamanlis has enabled Greece to pass the crucial test of democracy: a peaceful change of government by popular vote. A socialist government, left-wing by Western standards, has come into power without either itself suppressing democracy or provoking the armed forces to do so, and without breaking Greece's primary international links to Nato and to the EEC.

Thanks to Mr Karamanlis and to the basic good sense of the Greek people who elected him, ten years of restored and strengthened democracy in Greece can reasonably be viewed as a success story. Yet Greece remains a source of anxiety for the West, and one that has been getting worse rather than better. Mr Papandreou's bark may be worse than his bite - he has stayed in EEC and Nato and has renewed the agreement on American bases - but he does have a very irritating way of talking as though he would really feel more at home in the Warsaw Pact if only that option were open to him. He insists on entering a reservation about almost every political statement put out either by Nato or by the with that of the Danes and the Irish, which makes it at present impossible for the European Community to acquire a meaningful "security dimension".

The trouble seems to stem not so much from any profound ideological affinity with the Soviet block, but from a prickly nationalist perspective more typical of ex-colonial than of contemporary European counoutlook is that local conflicts are seen as more important than global ones. In Mr Papandreou's case. Turkey is seen as a far more reject the values of the alliance than the Soviet Union, and they are supposed to defend, Nato's usefulness is judged contain the seeds of their own almost exclusively by its ability decay, and are liable to breed and willingness to protect Greece forces of opposition that can against Turkey, itself a Nato member.

To most dispassionate Western observers, Mr Papandreou's specific fears about Turkish aggression seem groundless or at least wildly exaggerated - perhaps deliberately so with a view to sustaining a Greek national consensus around the left-wing government. Although Turkey claims an economic zone in the eastern Aegean around and among the Greek islands, and resents the fortification of those islands, there is little or no evidence of active Turkish preparation for an offensive either there or in Cyprus.

To that extent the Greek complaints about Nato are unnecessary and irrational. But at a deeper level they are understandable, not because of Nato's earlier complaisance towards the Greek dictatorship but above all because of its continued complaisance during and since 1974 towards the de facto partition of Cyprus.

Here the finger must be pointed not only at the United States but also at Britain. Under the Treaty of Guarantee Britain had every bit as much right and obligation to intervene in Cyprus as Turkey did, and her military bases in the island gave her the capacity to do so. An ultimatum from Britain to General Ioannidis after the coup of July 15 1974 could very probably have obviated the need for actual military action by either Britain or Turkey. Equally, an ultimatum from Britain to Turkey when the second Geneva conference broke down in August 1974, backed up by an offer to Mr Karamanlis of air cover for Greek troops if it were disregarded, might have impelled Mr Ecevit to dissuade Turkey's generals from turning permanent occupation. Those were grave and unforgiveable errors of omission. They helped to give the world the idea that Britain had become a toothless lion incapable of ever taking decisive action to resist aggression - an idea which tragically took root in Buenes: Airies among other places. Our very different reaction to Argentime aggression in 1982 has done to the Cypriots remains unrepaired.

their legitimate intervention into an illegitimate and apparently

Not that such wrongs can ever be repaired as easily as they are committed: Britain could hardly now, after ten years, suddenly threaten to take military action if Turkish troops are not withdrawn. But both Britain and the United States could and should make it clear to Turkey that their economic and military aid for her is not unconditional. It is as true today as it was in 1974 that "realism in politics is not necessarily served by supporting regimes which reject the values of the alliance they are supposed to defend".

QUIS CUSTODIET?

It is seventy-five years since MI6 absorb a relatively small be to compile a kind of Domes-Liberal ministers sitting on the Committee of Imperial Defence founded the Security Service, MI5. So far, its anniversary has proved a miserable affair, starting with the conviction of Michael Bettaney for trying to spy for the KGB and continuing in recent days with a public exposure of its past differences and dirty linen that has no precedent. It is still difficult to comprehend that the late Sir Roger Hollis, its director-general from 1956 to 1965, was investigated as a possible spy by no less than four inquiries before the Prime Minister cleared him with a Commons statement, in 1981. Last week Mr Peter Wright, for fifteen years an MI5 mole hunter, articulated on Granada Television's World in Action his belief that, "intelligence-wise, it was 99 per cent certain" Sir

Roger was a Russian spy. Mr Wright broke his personal oath of secrecy in the hope that the government would be pressurized by Parliament and the press into commissioning a fifth investigation. The Prime Minister has not obliged. The Opposition, too, was silent on the issue last week. Whether this weekend's disclosure of what purports to be more of the fine print of the inconclusive investigations of the 1940s 1950s and 1960s forces yet another rethink, remains to be seen. Mr Arthur Martin, the MI 5 man who handled the cases of Maclean, Philby and Blunt, said in a letter to The Times that this would be pointless. No amount of re-examination could resolve the Hollis affair.

There is, however, a strong case for a different kind of inquiry, one which goes beyond the search for Stalin's Englishthe search for Statut 2 service and MI6. The first stage would nize this and act accordingly.

amount of the secret vote. About two-thirds of its £125 million goes to the Government Communications Headquarters which, compared to the Security Service, and the Secret Intelligence Service, is both capital and labour intensive. That does not mean that with some 1,000 staff and an annual budget each of about £20 million (precise figures are never available) MI5 and MI6 are not worth subjecting to the Prime Minister's general drive for Whitehall efficiency. In 1979, Mrs Thatcher, to the fury of the Ministry of Defence, the Home Office and the Foreign Office (then the main customers of the clandestine agencies), which had taken their share of economies, exempted the secret services from manpower cuts. It is true that in the past five years a few Rayner-style scrutinies have been conducted on aspects of MI5 and MI6 work. These followed the efficiency probes of the near universally reviled Review of Overseas Representation carried out by the Think Tank on SIS and the overseas bits of MI5 in the mid-1970's. But what the secret services need is their own Mr Heseltine complete with his MINIS kit for discovering who does what, why and at what cost. Until last week when Mr Heseltine's MoD re-organization was enshrined in a White Paper. many thought that the Chiefs of Staff, along with the legal profession, and the Diplomatic Service, would remain largely immune from reform for the foresceable future. Early next year there will be a change at the head of MI5. There could be no better moment for the preparation of a MINIS-style exercise on the Security Service and her advisers should recogday Book on these secret baronies. Then questions should be asked about priorities and valuefor-money. Who should do it? Given the nature of the agencies' work, it would be impossible to employ management consultants. Mr Heseltine has his hands full at MoD. The task needs to be carried out by sharp, reformminded insiders under the supervision of an experienced outsider with a high security clearance. It might be time to recall Lord Rayner himself on a part-time basis. Scrutinising Smiley's People could be his greatest challenge, and much more fun than running Marks and Spen-CET'S.

Britain needs a successful and efficient Security Service with high morale not just to stop the breeding of a generation of Chemenko's Englishmen but to catch terrorists and to monitor anti-democratic groups on the extreme right and extreme left. Thanks to past and present penetration, its public and parliamentary image is seriously tarnished. At least two things are needed to restore it to health: a string of necessarily private successful operations, and a permanent arrangement for political oversight going beyond the Prime Minister's ministerial group on intelligence, which rarely meets, and its briefing organization, the permanent secretaries' steering group on intelligence. If Parliament's faith in the secret services is to be repaired, the Government will have, sooner or later, to agree to the foundation of an all-party, ioint Commons and Lords select committee on security and intelligence, peopled by senior Privy Councillors. Mrs Thatcher on Warnock From the Reverend Dr N. M. de S.

Sir, It is truly astonishing that in all the many paragraphs of their report the Warnock committee find no room to address the central question underlying their remit the nature and status of the human foctus.

"Instead of trying to answer these questions directly", they write, "we have, gone straight to the discussion of the question of how it is right to breat the human embryo." (para 11.9). That is, they have circumvented the principal question at issue in the debate and assumed that the approach to it of many moralists is necessarily mistaken. They summarise their arguments, but do not answer them.

The problem which the committee has faced is that merely to raise the question of the nature of the foctus in a serious fashion has implications for the debate. When, for example, sperm and ovum meet is homo sapiens alone in failing immediately to reproduce himself, but instead some kind of third thing, organic but not human, a person "potentially" but not yet? It is an ssumption required for Warnock's conclusions, but not one that will bear sustained examination.

The evidence of modern developments in genetics and embryology has all tended to confirm the commonsense idea that from the point of fertilisation the embryo is already a member of the species as much as you or me.

For this very reason what is decided in the current debate about the treatment of embryos will ultimately affect us all. Before Parliament accepts the idea that they may be grown for experiment it must be convinced that the same grounds used to support such research (which add up largely to its supremely valuable results) could not also one day be used to designate, say, an abandoned handi-capped child with a limited lifespan, or a demented and unwanted geriatric, for the same purposes.

If the case which Warnock accept is admitted, it is public sentiment alone which presently prevents such a development. The arguments are formally identical, as in a parallel case the president and secretary of the British Paediatric Association recently admitted on this page that there is no "moral difference" between abortion and the taking of the life of a new-born.

Public sentiment and the fashionable morality out of which it arises do not remain the same, as the acceptance today of abortion for trivial reasons and the present apparent readiness to consign the smallest children of the race to laboratory vivisection dramatically indicate.

Mrs Thatcher, a most consequent thinker, will take time to apply herself to these questions and resist the calls of the scientists and them. We must say "No, never" to embryo research, and we must say it by statute. If HM Government lead us in such a response to Warnock they will have done their nation an on 1970.

Food and health From Mr Keith Willoughby

Sir, The welcome report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy covering diet and cardiovascular disease (July 13) points out in its introduction that it has attempted to interpret complex evidence in such a way that the conclusions are clear to the general public and those responsible for offering guidance to them.

It is therefore surprising and disappointing that your Science Correspondent, in referring to this today, should cloud the issue by misrepresenting this report and misleading the public by categoris-ing eggs amongst high fat foods.

The facts are that eggs are not mentioned anywhere in the entire report. What is shown in table 5.2 is the amount of fat content in certain products, ranging from 59 per cent to 89 per cent. The total fat content of eggs is only around 10 per cent and for that reason obviously does not appear in any table of high fat

It is most unfortunate, therefore, that the experts on the committee should be misquoted, with the attendant danger of misinforming the public about eggs, which in context of the current discussion should be seen as highly beneficial constituents of a healthy balanced

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Unresolved doubts Regional initiative from grass roots Whatever form financial incentives to firms take, local initiative would

Sir, In commenting (leading article, July 19) on the wasted expenditure of £77m in support of Mr DeLo-rean's venture in Northern Ireland, you draw two conclusions regarding the wider issue of regional policy. First, that assistance to firms is better given as tax breaks than as cash handouts; second, that depressed regions can only be returned to pressed regions can only be remained to prosperity by making them more attractive places in which to invest.

Last December, the Government issued a White Paper, Regional Industrial Development, and asked for comments. It is understood that a package of regional policy measures is to be announced later this year. The indications so far are that the Government presently regards regional policy as socially necessary but lacking economic justification.

A fundamental reason for this view is that policy has come to be regarded as essentially a regional zero-sum game, to redistribute a given number of jobs, so that more jobs for one region is equated with unemployment elsewhere. What is lacking in current thinking and has been lacking for many years, is an appreciation of what regional policy, conceived differently, might contribute to long-term national economic growth as a part of a programme for regional prosperity.

Such a noticy must take a longterm view of regional needs to identify the specific problems that inhibit private initiatives and enterprise. The key problems are found in the quality of the physical and technical intrastructure, the availability of skills in the labour force and the ability to generate local enterprise from within the regions.

The problem is that these issues cut across the boundaries of Government policy organization -Department of Trade and Industry, Department of the Environment, Manpower Services Commission, etc - and there are no adequate means for bringing all their policy initiatives into focus in a regional context. This institutional lack is felt most acutely in the regions of England, which do not have their own development agencies comparable to those in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

In the last resort the regions must be helped to help themselves.

Sir, Today (July 16) you take Neil Kinnock to task for saying at Durham on July 14 that the miners' dispute is a "fight in the mining communities for survival" and that Mrs Thatcher "must not be allowed to let this industry and the coal as suffering "from fundamental defects arising from its design in a different historical period" and as having an external environment which "is neither visually pleasing nor functionally safe." The present scheme was the winner of an architectural competition and was the most popular of four schemes exhibited to the public. The article concentrates on the loss of the present market hall. No mention is made of the considerable council expenditure on it in the recent past or of the severe problems involved in rectifying the fundamen-tal shortcomings of the building. Similarly, no mention is made of the fact that the proposed new market hall will reflect the design, character and atmosphere of the present hall

Natural justice

From Mr Max Findlay

Sir, in your leader, "The security interest" (July 18), you say, inter alia .. the Government, having been vindicated on the substance of the case, has had its validity removed by the non-essentials". In other words, a breach of the rules of natural justice is a "non-essential".

If an employee at GCHQ is stripped of the protection of a union then, unless he is to have no protection at all, he must look to the courts for his safety. The rules of natural justice will be an important part of that safety.

If such an employee is to have no protection at all then, given the abuse of power which will inevitably follow, how secure are the foundations of a democratic state when a section of its people (however small in number) are not secure against that abuse? Yours faithfully, MAX FINDLAY traditional open market surrounded by a medieval-style square building with clock tower, together with naturally lit glazed arcades.

Leaving Beatrix Potter well alone

Mr R. J. Q. James

Sir, The proposal by American entrepreneur Robert Jani to create a Beatrix Potter theme park in the Lake District (report, July 17) fills me with horror. Further to discover that Penguin Books, having acquired the titles from Frederick Warne, are joining in this latest piece of exploitation of children's classics for motives best known to themselves, but superficially purely for profit.

We have already seen The Jungle Book and Winnie the Pooh turned into American-style cartoons which have devalued them and given the present generation of children a totally different outlook on these heretofore solid nursery characters, taking from these children the pleasure of reading these charming books without a preconceived celluloid impression.

Mr Jani intends to construct a Lakeland village in which the characters will be on show. Perhaps he nurtures a picture of a large effigy of Mr Jeremy Fisher being periodically snatched from his fishing by a mechanical Jaws-type trout, only to be shot to the surface of a pond further decorated with floating sweet wrappers when, as the pro-recorded tape will tell us, Mr Jeremy's mackintosh offends the

Does he hope we shall shuffle from Mrs Tiggy Winkle's cottage to Jemima Puddleduck's farmyard, to Pigling Bland's scene of captivity, delighted that he and Penguin have managed to "bring to life" the characters into which Beatrix Potter very successfully breathed life nearly 80 years ago?

He, no doubt, will argue that it will be a boost for tourism in Cumberland and Westmorland. The Lakeland poets discovered many long years ago that the area is One which needs no further enhancement and that nature has created the greatest tourist attraction without any help from the plastic idea of entrepreneurs and the investment of publishers.

I urge all concerned to think again very seriously before embarking on this scheme. They only have to look at similar ventures which, after a short period, become tatty and debased and destroy that which was good and held dear by many. Yours faithfully,

There will be no more assessment of pesticides or equipment, evalu-ation of resistance to insecticides and rodenticides, no monitoring of the status of pests in buildings, no advisory leaflets and no fundamental research on subjects of specific concern in non-agricultural and urban pest control.

Significantly, the PICL is now part of the Agricultural Science Service. If it forfeits its mandate to protect the nation's food and health. it will deserve to be known by its unfortunate initials.

Shuffling time step

From Mr Peter Cotes Sir. Whilst splendidly evoking the backstage atmosphere now prevalent at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane during rehearsals for the forthcoming musical to be staged there. Mr David Thomas's article, "Come and meet those dancing feet" (July 16) omits to mention the name by which the time step (the basic time step) is invariably referred to: "Shuffle off to Buffalo".

It may be titled "42nd Street" to fit the show's title, but the routine that is danced to that song was (long ago) nicknamed "Shuffle off to Buffalo" to fit an early tap-dance tune by that same title.

Most dancers would agree that to term it anything else backstage (and this is after all a "backstage musical" based upon the film, circa 1933, of the same name) would lack the same reality as most actors would find if, in a dressingroom gathering, any of their number referred to The Merchant of Venice as anything other than "The Merchant". Yours faithfully, PETER COTES.

OBITUARY MISS LALLY BOWERS Versatile stage actress

Lally Bowers, the actress, who died on July 18 at the age of 67, was a player of unstrained versatility, she said once that among her favourite characters were Candida, Millamant, and Maggie in Hobson's Choice. With her direct manner and a voice deep and exceptionally clear, she built through a busy life upon the basis of her repertory experience, and that left her ready for most parts. especially those that were the epitome of commonsense. A helnful endearing colleague, she was welcome in any cast.

Born on January 21, 1917, at Oldham, where she was educated - her real name was Kathleen - she worked as a secretary before theatre training with James Bernard, the redoubtable Manchester elo-cutionist who had Robert Donat among his pupils. At 19 she was understudying during iden Payne's direction at Stratford-upon-Avon, going later into seven years of intensive repertory at Manchester and Sheffield. FINANCE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Editor Kenneth Fleet

Is buying a house still the best way to save?

Today the Chancellor will publish his Green Paper on the future of building societies: an issue of national economic concern, not only because the societies are now providing mortgage finance for six million families, but also because they hold nearly half the liquid assets of the personal sector.

The main question, of course, is how far the traditional markets between the societies and the banks are to be moved: but these regulatory changes are taking place against a shifting background of personal preferences for housing and other assets of potentially greater significance. . Mr Nigel Lawson's general intentions are known, since he provided edited highlights, so to speak, in a speech just a couple of weeks ago. The building societies new framwork of behaviour will still confine them mainly to the business of housing finance. If they wish to behave entirely like banks, they must apply for

Bank of England and strengthen their Even without leaping over the new divide, however, the societies will be able to enlarge their business considerably; to toy with a little unsecured personal lending, and to offer a whole range of financial services - though only on an agency basis. And there are broadly three reasons why they should want to do so.

The first and most obvious is that the banks have, father late in the day, come to compete seriously for mortgage business. The building societies used to operate a kind of closed financial circuit taking in money from the personal sector to lend back to it for home purchase, leaving financial flows to the rest of the economy unaffected.

This was the societies' classic defence against complaints that tax privileges for housing were starving the economy of funds for industrial investment. Now the banks have broken the closed circuit, though the Bank of England soon raises a warning eyebrow when it thinks too much bank lending is going towards house

A more telling defence by the societies (and now the banks, too) is, however, that the impact on the economy caused by taxadvantaged mortgage finance is better measured by the share of real resources devoted to housing construction. And on this measure – housing investment as a share of gross domestic product - Britain has actually had a lower score than any of the other six major economies for the past

But this statistic is not a full answer to the question of how housing subsidies may alter relative prices and personal preferences. This issue is addressed in a report, published coincidentally today, by the Policy Studies Institute.

Present housing policies the PSI report argues, distribute subsidies in an inequifable fashion; raise house prices and hence rents by inflating artificially the demand for housing and distort personal choice. It is not mortgage tax relief that distorts the market, says this report, since businesses building houses for rent can get relief on interest payments; but the lack, since 1963, of a tax on imputed rent for owner-occupiers, together with the exemption of owner-occupied housing from capital gains tax, particularly in times of

But the PSI report also concludes that housing subsidies are much lower than they were. Subsidies to council tenants have fallen, obviously enough, because of sharp rises in council rents; and subsidies to owner-occupiers have declined through the drop in inflation and the partial indexation of capital gains tax Property prices oscillate much more than general inflation. Even so, a rise in average house prices of only 25 per cent over the past four years is strangely weak, compared with 38 per cent on average prices; and it suggests there may be some major underlying changes taking place in the housing market.

In 1914, only 10 per cent of householders owned their homes, by 1981 the "property-owning democracy" embraced 60 per cent. But the subsidies, as the PSI report shows, probably reached their peak in the 1970s. Owner-occupation was then given an added fillip by cut-price council house sales and higher council rents.

Roughly 70 per cent of households headed by married men aged 30-44 were found to be owner-occupiers by the 1981 census. This change will be carried up through the generations: the Government's recent projections for retirement income assumed that the proportion of the elderly who own their own homes will rise from 48 per cent today to 70 per cent in the early years of the 21st century. But among younger age groups, owner-occupation already may have reached the level from which further increase will be slower.

For building societies, which in the past 60-odd years have increased their assets a hundredfold - in real terms, mark you on the back of the house-owning scramble, this change is the second reason for diversification: a sensible desire to use their formidable networks of retail outlets for other business. But it is underscored by a third change, which is the growing attraction of other assets than home ownership.

This will not, pace the PSI, come about because the Government grasps the nettle of inequitable housing subsidies. No party is going to commit electoral suicide by the reintroduction of tax on imputed rent. But the Government is increasing meanwhile the attraction of other forms of personal investment, admittedly in a slightly creatic way. Together with the decline in inflation and a high "real" interest rate, this had increased dramatically the appeal of financial assets.

No financial calculation can ever wipe ont the sense of security generated by ownership of your own home. But when the least attractive bank deposit account now offers a real rate of return, even after tax, the balance of advantage has clearly

Most significant of all, perhaps, are the changes slowly coming about in the pensions system. Once upon a time a house was the only personal transcrable asset that could be acquired through the escape hatches in the tax system. If the "portable pension" ever becomes a reality - and if Inland Revenue rules are ever changed to permit pension schemes to generate tax-free capital sums which can be left to your children, not just income streams that die with you - the way in which you strive to join the propertyowning classes will be a matter not just of income but also of choice.

By David Young Energy Correspondent

The Central Electricity Gencrating Board has sold one of its redundant coal-fired power stations to the Maltese Government and another two are likely to pass into private ownership. Owners' implied indemnity

Before Mr Justice Neill

The obligation imposed upon charterers by clause 8 of the New York Produce Exchange standard form charterparty, to load, stow, trim and discharge cargo at their own expense, gave rise to an implied general indemnity, for the benefit of the owners, against the consequences of the master signing bills of lading which made the owners liable to third parties in respect of damage flowing from bad stowage. That indemnity could not be owners liability to a third party had been ascertained and accordingly, owners habinit to a tunit party and been accertained, and, accordingly, only when liability had been so ascertained did the owners' cause of action against the charterers under action against the charterers under the indemnity accrue.

Mr Justice Neill so held in a reserved judgment in the Commer-cial Court of the Queen's Bench Division, dismissing an appeal by the charterers. Telfair Shipping Corporation, against the award of a sole arbitrator who had awarded the P. Inersea Carriers SA, sums claimed under an implied indeminity arising from the terms of a time charterparty made between them on the NYPE standard form, and had rejected the charterers' contention that the claim was time-barred. Mr Jeremy Cooke for the charterers Mr Jonathan Hirst for

MR JUSTICE NEILL said that bags containing a cargo of rice had been damaged as a result of bad stowage, which had occurred in December 1974. No rice had been discharged from the ship before April 2, 1975; judgment had been given against the owners by an Iraqui court in December 1978 on a claim court in December 1978 on a claim by receivers in respect of the affected cargo; and the plaintiffs had-then claimed to be indemnified by the charterers. The arbitrator's appointment being perfected on March 30, 1981. Therefore, if the owners' cause of action had accrued before March 30, 1975, their claims would be time-barred. The arbitrator had found that the cause of action had arisen. that the cause of action had anisen, at earliest, on completion of the discharge, that is, on April 21, 1975.

The questions which now fell to be determined were what was the nature and extent of the indemnity to be implied when in owners' agent was required under the terms of a charterparty to sign bills of lading "as presented", and at what point did time begin to run for the purpose of a hindration period when the beneficiary of such an indemnity sought to efforce it?

It was common ground that the bills of lading, which the charterparty had obliged the master to sign had imposed obligations on the owners which were more oncrous than those imposed on them by the

than those unposed on them by the charterparty, and therefore that clause 8 entitled the owners to an implied indemnity despite the

that the indemnity was against liability, whereas the owners had argued that it was against the consequences of the master signing the more onerous bills of lading. His Lordship referred to Krüger & Co Ltd v Moel Tryvan Ship Co Ltd ([1907] 1 Q8 809, 825, 828, 832, CA and [1907] AC 272, 276, 277, 281, HL). R. H. Green and Silley Weir v British Railways Board ((1980) 17

From a consideration of those From a consideration of mose the receivers had ocen assertantical teast, it appeared that it was possible to identify at least three ways in which a person, A, who had become liable to B, might be able to of this case, whether a court of this case, whether a court of

The first was by an action for damages for breach of contract or warranty. In such a case A would be in a position to Claim that the in a position to claim that the incurring of his liability to B flowed directly from an act of C which constituted a breach of a contract between A and C or of a warranty given by C to A. The damages would be assessed in accordance with the priciples in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch 341). The cause of action would date from the date of breach.

The second was by a claim on an express indemnity. In such a case the extent of the indemnity and the time at which the cause of action arose would depend on the construction of the contract.

construction of the contract. If the indemnity were an indemnity against liability, as it was held to be in Bosma v Larsen, the cause of action would come into existence when A incurred liability to B. It might be that in certain circumstances a liability might be incurred for that purpose when the liability was still merely contingent see Forster v Outred & Co. ([1982] I WLR 86). If, however, the indemnity were a general indemindemnity were a general indem-nity, as the relevant clause was held to be in R. H. Green & Silley Weir v British Railways Board, then time would not begin to run against A for the purpose of pursuing his indemnity against C until A's liability to B had been established indemnity. Such an implied indem-nity would, prima facie, be a general indemnity of the kind recognized by the common law, as explained by Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in In re Richardson ([1919] 2 KB 705, equity only to the extent that such a person could now seek declaratory relief as soon as his liability had been ascertained; see Littlewood v George Wimpey & Co. Ltd. ([1953] 2 QB 501,519).

Accordingly his Lordship had nity to which the owners were entitled in this case was an indemnity against the consequences of the owners' agent, the master, having to sign bills of lading, and that that indemnity had not become cuforceable by action until, at the earliest, the liability of the owners to by the Iraq com.

It was very doubtful, on the facts
whether a court of tory relief regarding the characters' liability under the indemnity before December 1978, and even if it had that would not have affected the time at which the cause of action for the recovery of moneys from the charterers had begun to run.

If that were wrong, and time had began to run from the moment when the owners first incurred a liability to the receivers, in view of the fact that most of the receivers' claim had been in respect of shortages, the receivers could not have brought a claim in respect of the shortages before, at the very earliest, the commencement of the discharge on April 2, 1975.

Even in present of the demonstration

Even in respect of the damaged bags, the receivers' claim would have been formulated as a chain in respect of the bags discharged in a damaged condition. Accordingly, no actual liability had been incurred to the receivers before April 2, 1975.

The charterers had argued that the relevant date was the date when a contingent liability to the receivers had been incurred — the dates of the bad stowage or of the signing of the bills of lading in December 1974 or January 1975.

While seeing the force of that argument, based on the decision in Forster v Outred & Co, his Lordship had concluded that even if the indemnity were to be construed as an indemnity against incurring a liability, it could not have been invoked by the owners until they had incurred some actual liability to the receivers, and therefore even on that basis, their claim against the charterers would not be time-barthe common law, as explained by Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in In re Richardson ([1919] 2 KB 705, 712).

Although there was great force in the argument that as a mainer of principle an indemnity which was to be implied from the terms of a Clyde & Co.

United Tracing Corporation SA and Another v. Allied Arab Bank Ltd and others Marray Clayton Ltd and Another v Rafidain Bank and Others Before Land Justice Ackser, Land Justice Stade and Sir John Megaw

[Judgment delivered July 17] The courts could only intervene by way of an interiocutory injunction to prevent a bank honouring a performance bond on the ground of fraud where there was clear evidence both that the beneficiary's demand for payment on the bond was firmfulent and that the bank had knowledge of that firmd.

The Court of Appeal so held, in a reserved judgment, dismissing two appeals by the plaintiffs from judgments given by Mr Justice Neill, in the first action on June 7 and 15, 1984, and in the second in June 18, 1984, who refused to grant interlocutory injunctions against a musber of banks variously involved in chains of transactions ultimately number of transactions ultimately securing the issue by Rafidain Bank (the state bank of Iraq) of performance bonds in favour of the State Establishment for Agricultural Products Trading, Baghdad, buyers of food sold by the plaintiffs under 19 contracts wish a total value of The plaintiffs claimed, inter alig.

LORD JUSTICE ACKNER, giving the reserved independ of the court, said that the evidence of fraud must be clear, both as to the fact of Grand and as to the bank's

The mere assertion or augmnor of fraud was insufficient. The courts of fraud strong complorative evidence of the allegation, usually in the form of contemporary documents, particularly those emanating fram the buyer. The buyer should also have been given an opportunity to answer the allegation and to have failed to provide any adequate answer in circumstances where one could porperly be expected: It would be sufficient if the court considered on the material before it that the only realistic inference to-draw was that of fraud.

Having then considered all the available material, their Lordships concluded that although the plain-tiffs had provided a seriously argusble case that there was good reason to suspect that the demands on some of the performance bonds had not been honestly made, they had not established a good arguable case that the only realistic inference was that of fraud, and that the banks should therefore be restrained from making the payments:

If one went just on the result of a contest, then Herol Graham could be said to have established his middleweight career on foundations middleweight career on foundations as sound as those of the house of Brendan Ingle, his manager, which was put up as collateral to finance the promotion at Barmali Lane, Sheffield, yesterday.

Oraham achieved his win over

BOXING

Lindell Holmes, of Toledo, when the referee stopped the bout in the fifth round after Holmes had sustained a cut left eyebrow. The result will look good in the record books, but it was not a satisfactory one for the 6,500 spectators who paid to make Ingle's house safe.

Micky Vann, the referee, seemed too hasty in his decision to send the American back to his corner. The cut was not a bad one, it was not bleeding profusely, nor did it later need strickes in the dressing room. No wonder Billy Gutz, Holmes's manager said of Vann's decision: "It stank. They should have let it go to the end of the round and then seen the end of the round and then seen what happened in the next round. We were closing up the gaps and sooner or later he would have shown us his body." Holmes said he would not box Graham here again. "He's too safe a fighter. No wonder he does not get hurt. If I fight him again, I will fight in the States."

Graham admitted that the cut might have been the result of a butt. However, the Sheffield boxer should not be faulted. They were both warned four times for bringing their heads dangerously close.

In the fight itself Graham won all but one round, the third of which I gave even, by clever footwork and counterpunching. It is true that Graham is known for tactics that do ort make for a good scrap but, faced with a man with a devastating punch and 17 knockouts, it must be said that Graham followed the right strategy. He kept backing away from the American and countering with both hands as Holmes overbalanced test him.

The ring was the minimum size of 16ft, which should have been to of 16ft, which should have been to the American's advantage. Before the bout started, Billy Gutz said: "It's a bath-tub of a ring. Made for a fighter. That's one mistake Graham has made." But small though the ring was, Graham remained as elusive as a bar of soap in water. Holmes was never able to land a solid nunch.

The American depended on trying to slow down the clusive Graham with right hands, but the punches usually sailed harmlessly over Graham's head or fell degreestly short desperately short.

desperately short.

It is true that Holmes was closing the gaps at the beginning of the fifth, but it was almost certain that as the fight went further he would grow more and more frustrated. There seemed no reason to think that Graham would have flagged and been caught by the American had the bout proceeded beyond the fifth.

Ballesteros regains touch to win Open

Severiano Ballesteros won the 113th Open Champiouship at St Andrews yesterday. The under, Ballesteros and Langer phenomenal Spaniard wriggled clear of Tom Watson over the nine under. His second shot, a touch light, Statistically, the difference was that Ballesteros required pitched only four feet over the Swilcan Burn. The ball, imseven shots to cover the final parted with back-spin off the firm turf, screwed back and tumbled out of sight. After taking a five, the elegant Australian, who won so many torturous 825 yards which make up the 17th and 18th holes on the Old Course, whereas Watson took nine. Those two strokes separated them at the hearts throughout the week, also end, with Ballesteros taking 69 for an aggregate of 276, which is began to sink from view. His tempo gradually quickened under the burden of pressure 12 under par, and Watson scoring 73. In fact the American and, with four shots dropped in had to share second place with Bernhard Langer, of West as many holes from the fourth, he eventually turned in 41.

and Lanny Wadkins, both of the United States, shot 68 and the neck. Alongside him, Ballesteros walked with a spring in his step. It was difficult to believe that place on 28, one ahead of Nick this was the same man who cartir this year looked so depressed on the American tour. He touched the hole with a couple of efforts from around 20 feet at the first and fourth, then collected his first birdie championship by the scruff of from 12 feet at the long fifth. Then he took the outright lead by holing out from six feet for a two at the short eight after a marvellous tee shot. Watson, busily pacing along in the game behind, had been handed the outight lead on the first green by Baker-Finch, but he took three putts at the second. He went ahead again on his own again with an 18-foot putt for a birdie at the third. Yet even Watson, in spite of the favourable conditions, with little wind to make life difficult for the contenders looked tentative. He dropped a shot at the fourth and he took three putts at the fifth (564 yards) after reaching the green in two.

So Watson turned in 37, packed grandstand. Baker- he sprang from the pack with a Finch and Watson were 11 score of 66, and now trailed Ballesteros by one. It might have been two because the unchacteristically required three putts after an impressive drive at the tenth (342 yards), where Langer finally nudged home a sixto keep his hopes flickering. But there was an important swing to follow. Ballesteros came up short at the 11th (172 yards) and he needed three to get down. Watson smashed a drive on the 10th and took two putts for a birdie. Now it was Watson in his own again at 11 under par, moving on to exchange shots to par by driving into an unplayable lie at the twelfth and holing from 12 feet at the next for a birdie, although Ballesteros rejoined him by holing from 18 feet for a four at the long 14th

Now, as so often in the past, it boiled down to which player between the devil of the road and the deep of the Road bunker at the infamous 17th. Ballesteros faced this golfing Everset first, and measured his second shot perfectly. It finished 25 feet from the hole and he walked away with his regulation four. Watson came along 10 minutes later. But his approach was struck with too much venom. The ball merely flirted with the green and came to rest only one foot from the wall. The American realized there and then that he was on the threshold of being separated from the Open trophy for the first time since 1982.

His recovery to 25 feet was, in the circumstances, superb. Hole by hole But then the cheers rang out loud and clear from the last hole where Ballesteros watched a 15-foot putt hang momentarily on the lip of the hole, then disappear for a birdie. Watson missed his putt to salvage par back at the 17th and so he had to make a two at the last to tie. That was beyond even his extraordinary capabilities and, by taking four, he was com-pelled to accept a share of second place, as Langer had holed from 12 feet for a birdie.

 Marun Poxon, the 29-year-old Midland professional, is due to become a father for the first time in three weeks, but his wife, Jackie, has stayed at home in case she gives birth prema-turely. "If that happens I'm afraid she'll have to manage without me", Poxon said. "She the cheers of a record crowd compared to the 32 he compiled fully understands that I can't cascading on them from the in Saturday's third round when pull out of the Open."

A final round of 69, three under par, for a share of sixth place on 282 might not seem a bad note upon which to end the Opes, but Nick Faldo was in no mood to celebrate yesterday. "I'm fed up," he said as he slumped wearily in an interview room beside the Royal and Ancient club house.

His was a sturdy recovery from the various disasters of the day before, when a round of 76 removed him from his position at the top alongside Ian Baker-Finch, and left alongside Ian Haker-Finch, and left him eight depressing shots behind the Australian dark horse and the holder, Tom Watson. Faldo was left yesterday to dwell on what might have been. "I was praying it would blow like hell," he said, "and I could then have performed a miracle."

Alas, the Old Lady of St Andrews was at her most benign.

On Saturday, after three disturbing putts on the first, Faldo was killed off by a five at the fifth and a six at the next. His calm exterior belied the torment within. "I'm there on thereabouts every year, learning all the time," he said afterwards. "I felt I could have won here. Perhaps one day I'll do everything right." with no other obvious home-grown candidate in sight, the British golfing frateraity will eche that sentiment.

Fignon spurred to win after vendetta

From John Wilcockson, Paris

The cheers of the hundreds of thousands who filled the Champs Elysées yesterday were as great for

England span the generations as Pocock returns to Test squad

One new cap, Richard Ellison from Kent, is in the England party for the fourth Test march, sponsored by Corphall, starting at Old Trafford on Thursday, and one prodigal son, Par Pocock, is welcomed back. Willis, with Gower and his advocate, holds on to his place, but not Pringle, who played in the first three Tests, or Cowans, who played in note first three Tests, or Cowans, who played in note is 12 each time. Ellison is 24, a hefty Old Tonbridgian, who bats left-handed aggressively, and bowls handed, aggressively, and bowls right arm at modernin page, with an outswinger the his repetite; This season he and Alderman, the Australlian Test player, have been bowling the same sort of stuff in the Kent side. Both have taken 44 wickets, Ellison's costing him 17 95 and Ellison's costing him 17.95 and Alderman's 25.68. Ellison is an interesting choice, and with two strings to his bow he will be under less pressure than a young busman coming into the

Although Pocock will be 38 in September, he is eternally youthful. He so loves the game that it is always a tonic to talk to him. On the eve of the third Test match between England Test match between England-and West Indians in Barbaides in February 1968, Timus had a bathing accident, which re-moved several toes and also his chance of playing again on the tour. That evening Pocock, then only 21, came to my room, asking for a Wisden: He wanted to look any the records of the to look up the records of the great off-spiners in the game, a Sadly, for him and us, it never happened that way. In 1970 Illingworth was brought in 1970 Hingworth was brought in to captain the England side, Cowdrey being injured, and as an off-spinner he took Pocock's place. At the Oval, too, Pocock has been, in a sense, unforthate of the Oval, too, Pocock has been, in a sense, unforthan ate - destined always to being compared with Laker. had eight for 20." When Pocock did get back into the England side he tended to bowl better abroad than at home.

Of his 17 Test matches, only three have been in England, the last of these against West Indies in 1976. Since then a shortage of runs has led to Miller, Willey and Marks, among others, being preferred to him, because of their superior batting Now, after an eight-year gap, Pocock's perseverence, and enthusiasm have been rewarded.

The ball will turn at Old Trafford, which brings a new aspect to Thursday's match and accounts for the presence of Cook as well as Pocock in the Fredery 12 When the presence of the pres England 12. When the puch took spin in the one-day international on the same ground, the West Indian batsmen were all at sea (Miller's overs) and when Pocock played there for Surrey against Lancashire, in early June, he took 10 wickets in the match.

It is typical of Pocock that his reaction yesterday was to say that if he takes his chance now he could play another 30 times for England. Spinners mature late and Pocock made the point that the two stow bosviers in the Benson and Hedges final at Lord's on Saturday, Gifford and Simmons, are 44 and 43 respectively. At present Pocock stands fifteenth in the national bowling averages with 42 wickets at 23 runs apiece. Allott is second and Ellison third.

Willis's 15 first-class wickets

this season have cost more than 50 runs each. I noticed that in their Sunday newspaper columns during the Headingley Test match both Fred Trueman and John Snow reckoned the time had come for Willis to give way. They have been through it all themselves and thought they recognized the symptoms. And Willis could I suppose, be left out on Thursday if both spinners play. The alternative would seem to be to leave out Ellison, which would be a pity. With the series against West Indies already lost, now is the time to look to the future, Terry gets another game, which, to put him at his ease, the selectors promised him at Headingley. This is not, I think, a good practice. There must be thirties when it is in exercise's interests not to subject's player to a second ordest. Terry will be at No 3 again, and he would do can think of no one of his tender age I would back with any confidence to do that.

Abrahams upstages Willis in poor final

On the form shown in the Benson and Hedges Cup final at Lord's on Sajurday, it was a job to know how Warwickshire came to be so strongly fancied to win it. Lancashire, who beat them by six wickets with 12.2 overs to spare, were much the sharper side.

It was a disappointing match; set only because Warwickshire never quite came grips with it. As a showpiece, it highlighted the current weaknesses in English cricket. The only high class innings was played to by a West Indian, Rallicharran, albeit a holder now of a British passport; and although Allott Hughes kept his head and the left howled some good opening overs and Simmons performed his containing role to near perfection, there was none of the sheer hostility which wins Test matches.

Had the England selectors, when it was a new dawn.

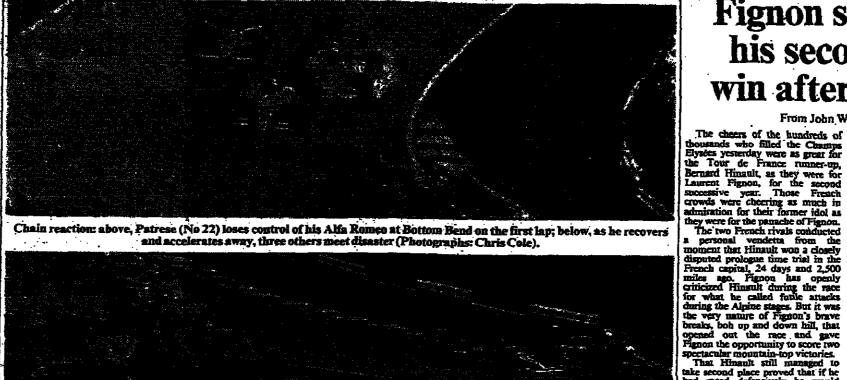

which wins Test matches.

Had the England selectors, when they met on Priday night, decided to drop Willis, Saturday's match would have reassured them. His old spark was missing. Ormrod, now 41, played him confortably, and without a heimer. Fowler too soon sent for his sun-hat, though, to give him his due Willis did dismiss. Fowler, well caught at the wicket off the inside edge. Fowler and the inside edge. Fowler and the inside edge. Fowler and the light of the sun to Abrahams were conspicuous by the way they walked when they were out. There is not much of that these

Where most county sides do now where most county sides do now excel their predecessors is in the speed and uninhibited vigour of their fielding. On Saturday, Lancashire exemplified this. They saved countless runs and, in doing so, gave the capacity crowd plenty to cheer.

While Amiss and Kallicharran were adding 54 together, it hardly seemed likely that Warwickshire would make fewer than 220. Even at the property of the space of t were adding 54 together, it hardly seemed likely that Warwickshire would make fewer than 220. But that is not Hinault's style. "I will fight until the last heath in my body," he told a French journalist last week.

Yesterday Hinault tried his utmost to win the final stage, a feat he achieved two years ago. But there were too many other factors that made this impossible.

Fignon, for instance, was eager to help Pascal Jules, his friend and team colleague, win on his twenty-hird birthday, Frank Hoste, who lost his green jersey of points leaders to Sean Kelly on Saturday, was desperate to win it back. The match of the day — many said, the match of the world championships — lived up to expectations at Westburn Park, Aberdeen, yesterday when Willie Wood, of Scotland, beat the defending champion, David Bryant of England, 21—12.

David Corkill, (Ireland) — maintained his unblammabled record by defending champion, David Bryant of England, 21—13.

David Moorcroft's attempt to the Olympics due to the eastern win an Olympic gold medal by block boycott. Reitz and Joseph reproducing the circumstances which led to his world 5,000 unctres record two years ago is working so far. His victory in the Dream Mile here late on Saturday evening - one of a to beat American Olympic series of performances that favourite, Henry Marsh, whose alternately delighted and distressed the British contingent in 3min 50.95secs was exactly what he had hoped for, being just over a second outside the time he did in 1982 two weeks before running 13min 00.41sec. both races being in the Bislett

Moorcroft leaves for Los Angeles today with a similar lapse of time, just over two weeks, until his Olympic 5,000 metres. But, he said, this year's training, marred by a recurrent virus infection, was nowhere near as intensive as his prerecord training. Also his "natu-ral pessimism" left him worried about the prospect of three races, heats, semi-final and final in three days, when he has only had three races altogether this The organizers of the Dream Mile - under contract to ABC Televisom of the United States, hence the 11.35pm start, local time - having suffered the shock of Steve Cram's withdrawal, with a foot injury; which may yet threaten his Olympics, were aghast when Sydney Maree pulled out of the race about 15 minutes beforehand. They were then very angry when they discovered that Maree had had an injury, pulled muscles behind the right knee, for a fortnight.

Maree's subsequent vagueness about his chances of MEN recovery and the airy suggestion Bellis that "my friend, Chuck Aragon could take my Olympic place" (he did not know entries closed last week) suggest that even if Maree turns up for his heat in Los Angeles, he is unlikely to get much further. That should cause as many ructions on the United States team as in the continue their contract for the Dream Mile, which finances the Oslo meeting. For nobody else is happy about the late Saturday schedule, which drew only 5,000 people this year.

Colin Reitz's British record in the 3.000 metres steeple chase, 8min 13.78sec establishes him as one of the Olympic favourites, although his scintilating last lap sprint failed to detach Boguslaw Maminski of block boycott. Reitz and Joseph Manmoud, the Frenchman who is third on the Olympic ranking list, although he ran the flat 3,000 metres here, then discussed how they might conspire tactic of starting slowly and finishing quickly can only be by fast mid-race

Ikem Billy's win in the 800 metres was quite superb. Not only has he reduced his two races in four days, but his time of Imin 44.65sec puts him in the world's top 10. In so doing, he has beaten Steve Ovett and Peter Elliott, both of whom edged Billy out of an Olympic place. Last year's European junior champion's triumph could not mask Elliott's tragedy. He faded dismally to eighth, and is evidently worried about a foot injury, which may prove to be a stress fracture.

Tim Hutchings is getting closer to the 5,000 metres time that injuries have also pre-vented, but his 13min 20.24secs could not stop. Alberto, Cova, the Italian, who is well on route to his third 10,000 metres gold medal in three years after his victories in the world and

Shirley Strong is another
Olympic medal favourite who had a successful come-back after two weeks of injury. But her time of 13.32 seconds for 100 metres hurdles indicates some speed work is necessary before she leaves for Los Angeles next week.

Ireland dismiss coach McBride

Willie-John McBride, capped 63 times by Ireland and manager of the 1983 British Lions, is to lose his post as coach to Ireland after only one season. I understand that this firmed today by the Irish Rugby Football Union.

McBride was voted out of office at weekend, although he remains one of the five selectors for the time being. It could, however, be difficult for him to continue in that capacity and, although he has made no comment, he may be considering recognition.

Doyle, too, is a selector, the others being Jinny Donaldson, Michael Coddy and Jim Klernan, brother of the former national coach Ton Klernan. Two of the panel are from Leinster, two from Munster, and one, McBride, from Ulster.

Despite the sad fall in McBride's stock over the last 12 mouths – he had his difficulties with the Lions in New Zealand last summer and then New Zealand last summer and ther sustained a disastrous champion ship campaign in which Ireland lost all four games – there will be considerable sympathy for him and, in Ulster, great indignation over his coach, Tom Kiernan, began his three-year term with a whitewash crowns. It was McBride's misfor-time to inherit an aging side which would clearly have to be dismanted at a time when there were few obvious replacements. Yet after only two seasons as a provincial coach McBridde had made Ulster a formidable side, good enough to undertake a short tour to Romania were unable to do last May.

The feeling persists that mana-gerial success came to McBride too quickly; yet having appointed him coach Ireland clearly should have coach Ireland clearly should have given him more than a few mouths in which to establish himself. At the same time Doyle's credentials made him a strong contender for the coaching post last year: during his five seasons with Leinster they won the provincial championship four times and shared the fifth, albeit with many of the players who made with many of the players who made up the national team.

Doyle, aged 42; won a Blue at Cambridge University in 1965, playing in the same position as that occupied two years earlier by the current English coach, Richard Greenwood. Doyle then played club rugby for Blackrock College and toured South Africa with the Lions in 1968, playing in one international.

From Michael Seely, Keeneland

Harry Beeby gave the top price of $900,000 at the final session of the two-day Fasig-Tipton sales which ended on Saturday evening. The managing director of Doncaster sales refused to disclose the identity of the client for the Seattle Slew filly, out of the Northern Dancer mare Royal Statute. The yearling is a half-sister to several stake winners, including Awansif. Speculation was rife afterwards as to whether Beeby was intending to resubmit his purchase at Doncaster in September.

The filly was sold by Windfield Farus. Joe Hicksty, their general manager, said: "She didn't make it for Keeneland as she was a little backward at the time they made their inspections. But she's improved week by week. And it's nice to have had the star at Fasig-Tip-ton."

Windfields have the best chance of shattering last year's world record price of $10.2m at Keeneland. Fifth price of $10.2m at Keeneland. Fifth into the ring this evening will be the Northern Dancer half-brother to Devil's Bag and Glorlous Song. Mr Hickey was clearly rooting for his champion. "All the hig hitters have been looking at him including the Robert Sangster outfit and the Maktoum's Men. We ought to have had him on a conveyor helt' as they've hardly been timed to put him back in the box."

"On our grading system I have him 97. That's the highest I've ever gone. Joe Thomas, our vice-presi-dent; had Shareef Dancer at 100 before we sold him for $3.5m in 1981. But I prefer this one. He's more elegant and mere mature".

Our home buyers were there in force at Fasig-Tipton. The BBA (England) gave $435,000 for a lay colt by Storm Bird, one of three of the first crop of the 1980 Dewhurst Stakes winner, who was winter favourite for the Derby.

Britain out of the medals

The world junior championships, which ended in a torrential thunderstorm on Saturday, were dominated by crews from the Eastern European countries. East Germany won 11 of the 14 gold medals. Romania one and the Soviet Union one. France broke the monotony with their victory in the men's eights, while British crews reached five finals, the same at last year, but, unlike last year, won no men's double sculls in which Burfitt and Fletcher came fourth, 0.4sec behind the Italians and 4.24sec, behind the East German gold medal rowed well to achieve a creditable fifth, the same placing for the coxed pair who experienced difficulties with the conditions.

in the women's events, the British coxed four, baving made history by qualifying for the final, were kept in srith place after a brave struggle with their French counterparts. The eight rowed well but came in fifth and last and were not in the same league as their huge opponents.

From a Special Correspondent, Jonkoping France won the men's eights by 0.28sec from East Germany: their team colleagues won two silvers and a bronze medal with crews composed of individuals of relatively normal size, an encouraging example for Britain,

The Times guide to career development From graduate to secretary

Amongst this year's graduates, facing. a difficult though slightly improving job market, there will be a number of women planning to take secretarial courses. The fact that this is an almost wholly feminine option shows how little change has occurred in students' perceptions of male and female occupational roles - it would be almost unheard of for a man to suppose that his best chance of getting a job would be by learning shorthand and typing.

There are two main reasons for a graduate to take secretarial training it is felt that shorthand and typing at least provide an entry into the labour market, and that, having a foot in the door as a secretary, a graduate can demonstrate her intelligence and have a chance of promotion to a more interesting and responsible post.

The first of these assumptions is undoubtedly true. Whilst as many as one in five arts graduates are likely to be unemployed six months after taking their degrees, all but a handful of those completing postgraduate secretarial courses find employment within weeks of finishing their training. Average starting salaries are between £6,500 and £7,000 p.a. in London; about £1,000 less elsewhere.

However, the second assumption, that secretarial work can act as a stepping-stone to executive or managerial responsibility, is far more dubious. In large companies with a well-defined occupational structure, career progress is likely to be a more senior secretarial role, rather than out of the secretarial rut altogether. At the National Westminster Bank there are 12 senior secretaries who have managerial status - but they are still secretaries, serving the bank's top executives. The secretarial side has its own strucure, and to quote Sarah Townsend, the NatWest's career planning adviser, "A graduate seeking a banking career should not enter the bank as a secretary.

Going for 'glamorous', professions has pitfalls

Though it may be possible for a graduate to enter a large organization as a secretary, such a move is discouraged IBM says that they don't recruit graduate secretaries and the Civil Service Commission commented that, "We wouldn't encourage educationally well-qualified people to come in as secretaries."

Employers' wariness of graduate secretaries is justified by the dissatisfaction often expressed by graduates after a period in employment. Take these comments from a graduate in her first secretarial job: Bosses tend to lead you up the garden path - it's prestigious to have a graduate as a secretary. But they don't know how to cope with people who are intelligent -

for graduate women and questions their value in the long run there's very little you're allowed to do On your own initiative.".

Some managers hang on to a good secretary, blocking her path to promotion or at least neglecting to encourage her aspirations. A survey of executive secretaries, carried out by the Alfred Marks Bureau in 1982, suggested that managers "do not see their secretaries progressing out of the secretarial channel, often for the selfish reason that they would then be diprived of their invaluable services." One of the respondents was damning in ther criticism of managerial attitudes: "I have found repeatedly that men feel both intimidated and threatened by well-educated and intelligent women and this fear leads them to seek every opportunity to deny secretaries further training and access to knowledge which could lead to opportunities of promotion."

By its nature, the secretarial role is subordinate and supportive. Other respondents to the survey said "I enjoy being able to help someone else make a success", "I get a great deal of satisfaction from taking the mundane problems off my boss's desk enabling him to devote his time to his main function", "By definition, the secreta-ry/P.A. role is limited." There must be many secretaries who are satisfied with this situation; but why should a graduate, who has spent at least three years learning to think independently, settle for so little?

It is sometimes thought that secretarial qualifications help people to obtain 'glamourous' jobs in publishing, broadcasting and public relations. However, while typing is useful, the benefits of taking a full secretarial course are doubtful. Lyn Beaumont, of "Graduate Appointments", who specialize in the media, says: "If you go in as a secretary, it's very hard to break the mould. Graduates have proved themselves already - by getting a degree - so they should be able to start at assistant executive level. If, for example, an English graduate were to ask me about getting into public relations, I would advise her not to take a secretarial course. It is only women graduates who are advised to train as secretaries; why should secretarial work be a stepping-stone for them, when it isn't for men?"

However, there are situations where secretaries can be promoted to responsible jobs in the media. In a small or medium-sized publishing more flexible, the only way to enter may be as a secretary. Secretarial qualifications do at least enable : graduate to make an immediate productive contribution - an important bonus to small firms with limited resources for training. Even with this kind of employer, moderate typing -as opposed to full secretarial training - may be sufficient.

At the BBC, secretaries do have the chance, after working for the Corporation for a year, to apply for jobs such as production assistant. Entry to the BBC is so competitive that the secretarial route may be the only feasible way in, but the climb up the internal ladder can be slow because of the competition for the more exciting jobs.

There is, an argument that with new technology the secretarial role in organizations of many kinds is becoming more responsible and rewarding. Repetitive typing has been taken over by the word processor, the Manpower Services Commission tell of evidence to suggest the emergence of higher level, specialised posts, such as the administrative or correspondence executive. dence secretary, Automation in the office; and the level of skill needed to make it efficient, suggest that there will be scope for the graduate who is interested in working in a senior support capacity.

A greater degree of flexibility and choice

There are also several advantages in having shorthand and typing to fall back on. A secretary can find work in almost any type of organization. She can often have a considerable degree of flexibility over hours of work, and as a "temp" can sample a variety of Another point in favour of secretarial work relates to the question of bridging the gap between full-time education and a career Some graduates spend a couple of years between completing their education and finding a career to which they feel they can commit themselves, doing jobs which do not require a whole-hearted involvement.

work may be satisfying, for an interim period, for the person in her early twenties who does not have a clear idea of her career path. She should be wary about using secretarial work as a back door" to anything. Before investing time and money in a secretarial course, great effort should be made to find out if one can find a satisfying job on the strength of a ction Moulding: Ends

 This week's instalment of BBC2's science series IMAGINED WORLDS (7.30 pm) has its share of gruesome technical talk: "avuision lesions", "C5 and G6 ruptured but not torn out". There is also a photographic cross section of the spinal cord. But on the whole Patrick Wall -- ofessor of Anatomy at University College, London - presents his radical theories about the perception.

"If it had been conceived for the of pain with attractive simplicity and common sense. Some 20 years ago, ... New missile more deadly than Exocet

Eagle missile destroyed a Royal Navy warship in a successful trial in the Eastern A Royal Navy Sea Harrier carrying the live warhead was launched from the carrier HMS Illustrious. It made a low altitude attack and fired the missile, which scored a direct The target, the 22-year-old county class destroyer HMS Devonshire, was completely disabled and extensively damaged. It was then sunk by a Tigerfish torpedo fired from the submarine HMS Splendid.

The missile, which is com-peter controlled and fitted with a larger warhead than any other sea-skimming warhead, showed it has an even greater destructive capability than the French Exocet.

HMS Glamorgan and Antrim, sister ships to the Devoushire, were both hit by Exocets during the Falklands War but they were able to remain effective after repairs. The Government caused a row in April by ignoring the Sea Eagle and placing a £130m order with the American company McDonnell Douglas for its surface-to-surface Harmissile for the Royal

Letter from St Andrews

The hallowed turf is left to the obscure

Ian Baker-Finch, virtually unknown in Britain until now, in the recent Glasgow Classic where he won £2,435.

He was fifth in the Australasian Order of Merit and thus qualified to enter the pen. He certainly cut the mustard on one of Britain's toughest courses encouraged, no doubt, by the Royal and Ancient increase of 10 per cent in the prize money to £55,000. He was out on his own until the irrepressible Tom Watson who plays like a machine.

But that was on Sunday morning. By the evening the 113th Open had crowned its winner: Severiano Ballesteros. Today the circus leaves town. The sellers of pork pies and champagne have folded their tents; the crowds will have departed along with the television crews, the press and the wives and girlfriends of the players. St Andrews will return to normal. Normal, that is, except for the tartan-clad American visitors who will tread the same sacred turf as the champion did the week before. Vast scores will be logged on the ground where Baker-Finch and Tom Watson each shot 66.

The town will no longer be the centre of the world's sporting attention. Husbands vill no longer hush their wives and children will once more get to speak to father.

But last week, St Andrean's will say, you should have beenhere. We had record weather and some pretty good golf too.

The town had record attendances and the Burghers of St Andrews were overjoyed. By yesterday evening more than 190,000 had paid to watch the games. All this in a town with a population of 15,000 which quadruples in St Andrews staged a roll-call of the famous last week: Paimer, Player, Nicklans, Watson, Ballesteros – and Baker-Finch. Who? You may well ask. He is an Australian aged 23 from Queensland who is playing his first open in Scotland.

No wonder there was a smile on the face of the Old Course, although the course always exacts its revenge on those who take liberties; the par four 17th, for instance, which even the likes of Trevino and Palmer play as a nar five and accept four as a par five and accept four as a stoke gained. There is a case, I was told, came to Europe earlier this not seriously I think, of year. His best placing before staging the Open at St year. His best placing before staging the Open at year. His best placing before staging the Open at yesterday was tied joint fourth Andrews every year. The Scots yesterday was tied joint fourth are truly knowledgable about golf but that was taking chauvinism a little too far I thought But if the Open was staged annually at St Andrews what would the rest of Britain think? I did not canvass/suggestions on that point. In 1985 the Open will be held at Royal St George's Golf Club at Sanwich, Kent.

The Open is such big business that it would be heresy to ue only one venue. It can almost rival last week's Democratic Convention in San Francisco for organization. That may have been a dall convention for the natives, according to Frank Johnson in this space on Friday, but it was anything but a dull Open for the natives here. Helicopters came chattering in daily, ferrying the wealthy and the traffic weary past last week's traffic blackspot, Cupar, to see the mighty being culling in Open golf, it takes place twice in three days, once after the first two rounds and again after the third. If you have been unlucky with the Beardies, Hell Bunker and the Valley of Sin and the dread Road Hole, the 17th, then you are cut. Part of the circus left carly Saturday morning. It was a good open and the experience for those cut will stand them in future stead. Finishing in 60th place can earn a player 1,100 and even at 156th there is the consolation of £330.

It was a great championship at St Andrews. There in nothing like an Open, even more so when it is played in idyllic conditions on Fife's most dramatic course. And it

National Day

Egypt today celebrates the anniversary of the young officers' revolution of July 23, 1952, which led to the abdication of King Farouk. This did not mean the immediate end of the monarchy. It was the following June before the new boy King was deposed and General Neguib became president.

The song-period is over for many birds, but skylarks are still singing high above the ripening wheat, and the yellowhammer's song chimes on through the long, hot afternoons. Goldfinch families are very noticeflashing gold wing-bars, and the parents have a shining red, white and black face. Robins look worn and battered with the effort of feeding their young who can be heard hissing deep in the hedges. The flowers of high summer are hedge bedstraw- and the yellow ladders of melilot. Dry, chalky places are overgrown with the dark yellow flowers of St John's wort and yellow ilowers of St John's wort and pale pink centaury. Rosebay willowherb makes patches of shocking pink among the bracken. The soft young heads of teasel are guarded by a ring of curved silver spears. The petals of the dog roses have fallen, but green hips are swelling beneath the star-shaped sepals.
